Blue Owl is central to what is au courant: the credit cycle and the AI boom, and as an investment opportunity itself—or not.

Is Private-Asset Star Blue Owl Flying Too Close to the Sun?

BY ANDY SERWER

Suddenly, Blue Owl Capital is everywhere.

This past Tuesday, the upstart alternative investment firm with an aptitude for private credit announced a financing deal for Meta Platform's $27 billion artificial-intelligence data center in Louisiana. The week before, at the packed CAIS Alternative Asset Summit in Los Angeles, Blue Owl co-CEO Marc Lipschultz called JPMorgan Chase CEO Jamie Dimon's "cockroach" warning about risks in private credit an "odd kind of fearmongering." And earlier this month, Blue Owl signaled that it was barreling into the $13 trillion retirement market.

It's heady stuff for a firm that didn't even exist a decade ago. If the big alt firms—Carlyle Group, Blackstone, KKR, and even Apollo Global Management and Ares Management—are now as familiar as JPMorgan, then where did this strangely named bird Blue Owl come from?

As Paul Newman asked Robert Redford in Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid, "Who are those guys?"

"It's extraordinary what they've done," says George Walker, CEO of the old-line money-management firm Neuberger Berman (and a cousin of the Presidents Bush), whose employees own a piece of Blue Owl via a trust. "It was just a start-up, and now their $26.6 billion market cap compares to a number of large, century-old financial institutions."

Blue Owl's back story entails some rich behind-the-scenes machinations, but more significantly it reflects the stunning trajectory of private markets, which tripled to $26 trillion in assets over the past decade, according to a University of Massachusetts study. The company is also central to what is au courant: the credit cycle and the AI boom, and as an investment opportunity itself—or not.

"Blue Owl is the pretty girl at the dance right now," says Wall Street trader David Williams. "We're talking many billions in private credit."

Ah yes, private credit. Though Blue Owl has three lines of business, private credit—specifically direct lending in private-equity deals—is the firm's calling card and growth engine, and the straw that's stirring Wall Street's punch bowl lately. Its core direct-lending business ($145 billion in assets under management out of $284 billion total) was conceived in 2016 as Owl Rock at the Putnam Restaurant in Greenwich, Conn. ("Comfort food at its best") by principals Doug Ostrover, formerly the 'O' of GSO Capital Partners (now Blackstone Credit); Craig Packer, a former Goldman Sachs partner; and Lipschultz, a former KKR partner. The name came from "the wisdom of an owl and stability of a rock," says Lipschultz. "And the website was available."

Instead of relying on the typical general-/limited-partner private-markets fund structure, Owl Rock used what are called business-development companies, or BDCs, which issue stock and lend money to businesses, usually those with junk credit ratings. (Other major alt firms have also turned to BDCs, which sport high yields.) BDCs send some 90% of the interest collected on those loans to shareholders through dividends, similar to real estate investment trusts.

Two of Blue Owls' BDCs are publicly traded; others are private. Blue Owl Capital Corp. (which yields 11.4%) and Blue Owl Technology Finance (9.9%) are both down about 14% this year, the former from Jan. 1 and the latter from when it began trading on June 12. Blue Owl stock, at $16.68, has fallen 28% year to date, more than any of its alt firm peers, which signals either the risk of falling interest rates and weakening credit or a buying opportunity. Goldman Sachs recently called the fears overblown and cited Blue Owl as undervalued, noting that it has a stock-price-to-fee-related earnings multiple (a common metric in the business) of 21.7, which is 5% below its two-year low.

"Blue Owl has generated a stable, highly predictable stream of earnings," says Ostrover, its other co-CEO. "It makes no sense that we're down more than our peers. If anything, we should be down less." Wall Street may be particularly wary of direct lending, as shares of both Blue Owl and Ares, which specialize in that business, have fallen hard. It's also true that both stocks had previously outpaced their peers.

The second leg of the Blue Owl stool was created years earlier, when a Lehman Brothers executive, Michael Rees, started a fund at Neuberger Berman (then owned by Lehman) that bought stakes in asset managers like D.E. Shaw. After Lehman collapsed in September 2008 and Neuberger emerged from the ruins, Rees, with others, restarted the business. Rees' endeavor—named Dyal after his children Dylan and Alexia—raised its own capital (from Koch Industries, among others) and invested in the likes of Silver Lake and Vista Equity Partners.

In 2020, Dyal merged with Owl Rock through a special purpose acquisition company engineered by HPS Investment Partners (the private-credit business that BlackRock recently bought), with the resulting company named Blue Owl. (A bank working on the deal had called it Project Blue. So, "blue" was added and "rock" was dropped.) Neuberger employees retained a stake, which today amounts to some 25%.

The hatching of Blue Owl was problematic to some companies in which Dyal had invested, particularly Sixth Street Partners (formerly the private-credit arm of TPG) and Golub Capital, both of which sued, claiming that the new company created a competitor with sensitive information about their operations. The defendant begged to differ and won in court.

The direct-lending and strategic-capital businesses were once close in size, but soon the former outstripped

Michael Nagle/Bloomberg

Marc Lipschultz, co-CEO of Blue Owl, clapped back at Jamie Dimon, saying, "There might be a lot more cockroaches at JPMorgan."

the latter. Friction ensued between Rees and private-credit honchos Ostrover and Lipschultz. Peace in the valley prevailed, though, and Rees remains co-president of the firm. Dyal, renamed GP (for general partner) Strategic Capital, today has assets under management of $67 billion, which besides investments in asset managers has stakes in National Basketball Association teams including the Atlanta Hawks and the Sacramento Kings.

In 2021, Blue Owl bought Oak Street Real Estate Capital, a Chicago-based firm specializing in sale-leasebacks and triple-net lease deals, as its third business. This wing of Blue Owl has AUM of $71 billion and is home to the Meta infrastructure deal and others, such as its Stargate data centers investment in Texas and New Mexico. Next, Blue Owl is working on deals with AI cloud company Nscale and investment firm Valor Equity to finance purchases from Nvidia, for example, whose chips go for $30,000 and up, according to a person familiar with the matter.

Blue Owl built its direct-lending business by borrowing from the Silicon Valley playbook of "scale first, monetize later," or by underpricing established private-credit firms to gain deal flow, and raising fees later. Most of the firm's direct-lending business is done as part of private-equity buyouts by PE firms like Thoma Bravo, Blackstone, and Warburg Pincus. These investments generally entail floating junk bonds, a business pioneered by Drexel Burnham in the 1980s.

The private-credit market grew from $2 trillion in 2020 to $3 trillion at the start of 2025—some of which came at the expense of big banks, which have been constrained by regulations promulgated in the wake of the 2008-09 financial crisis. Was it sour grapes, then, when Jamie Dimon called out private-credit firms over the recent spate of bankruptcies hitting banks? The money quote: "When you see one cockroach, there's probably more." Lipschultz fired right back at the CAIS conference: "I guess [Dimon is] saying there might be a lot more cockroaches at JPMorgan."

He played down the back-and-forth this past week, calling it "colorful language that distracts from the core question—which is, are these isolated incidents somehow indicative of a broader issue in credit writ large? If they were, where would the problems live? I can tell you these isolated recent incidents bear no relation to private credit, and certainly no relation to Blue Owl."

If he's right, Blue Owl could become the Big Bird of Wall Street. If not, its wings will be clipped. B

AI Traders Face Off

Artificial-intelligence chatbots have seemingly taken the world by storm. But can they trade like human pros?

Not yet, judging by Alpha Arena, a new competition measuring the investing ability of six of the best-known large language models. Nof1, an AI start-up running the contest, gave each of the LLMs $10,000 each on Oct. 17, and told them to invest in cryptocurrency futures. By this past Thursday, OpenAI's ChatGPT held a position worth just $2,752, a 72% drawdown in six days, and Google's Gemini tumbled 60%. Grok 4, run by Elon Musk's xAI, and Anthropic's Claude Sonnet also took losses. The only two LLMs in the green thus far are Alibaba's Qwen3 Max and DeepSeek Chat, up 25% and 17%, respectively.

Of course, cryptos are volatile assets. But it shouldn't be a surprise that chatbots aren't yet good traders—they run on words, not numbers. "Large language models are trained on historical data, they're backward-looking, and to win in markets you have to be adaptive," Nof1 CEO Jay Azhang tells Barron's. Training LLMs to trade is "a little like trying to get a goldfish to continue its train of thought."

He hopes Nof1 can solve the issue. Nof1 is building a model trained on numbers, which it hopes will outperform the best investors. It set up Alpha Arena, which ends on Nov. 3, to create a benchmark for how existing chatbots trade. The Street's top traders look safe for now. – George Glover

The Federal Open Market Committee announces its monetary-policy decision. A quarter-percentage-point rate cut is all but a done deal, bringing the federal-funds rate to 3.75%-4%. Wall Street is more interested in Fed Chair Jerome Powell's news conference and how many more interest-rate cuts can be expected this year and in early 2026. Multiple Fed governors have emphasized the downside risk to the labor market in speeches since the mid-September FOMC meeting. Traders are pricing in a greater than 95% probability of a quarter-point rate cut at the December meeting as well and a federal-funds rate of 3%-3.25% by June of next year, a full percentage point less than currently.

THE BIG MONEY POLL

In our exclusive poll, investment pros expect profit growth, lower interest rates, and AI to drive the market higher. And a lot of them like gold.

BY PAUL R. LA MONICA

Illustration by Seba Cestaro

There's nothing like a roaring stock market to turn investment bears into bulls. Just ask respondents to Barron's latest Big Money poll of professional investors, 47% of whom now say they are upbeat about the market's prospects over the next 12 months. That compares with just 28% who called themselves bullish in the spring, the lowest reading since at least 1997.

Consider all that has happened in the past six months to erase the bearish sentiment that suffused our spring survey—and Wall Street. The S&P 500 index has rallied nearly 40% from its April low as fears of a crippling trade war have faded. Renewed enthusiasm for artificial-intelligence-related stocks has also helped propel the index to successive highs. And expectations for more interest-rate cuts and fiscal stimulus continue to lift investors' spirits.

Our latest poll finds that only 19% of money managers are bearish about the outlook for stocks, compared with 32% in April, a near-30-year high. Another 34% say they are neutral, down from 42% in the spring.

This isn't a time to rest easy, however, as the market's rebound has led to new concerns. Interest in AI has levitated shares of Nvidia, Broadcom, and their ilk, but also stoked fresh fears of an AI bubble. Comparisons to the late-1990s dot-com bubble abound, as do invocations of the crash that followed.

"AI will be transformative, but stocks have run up so much," says James Bitzer, chief investment officer at Falcon Point Capital in San Francisco. "The risk is that valuations will compress."

Barron's conducts the Big Money poll of professional investors twice a year, in the spring and fall, with the help of Erdos Media Research in Ramsey, N.J. The latest poll, emailed to money managers in late September, received 122 responses. The poll surveys portfolio managers and investment strategists at a wide range of firms throughout the country, from some of Wall Street's biggest investment firms to smaller, independent wealth advisors.

Despite the increase in the percentage of bulls, 57% of Big Money managers say they think stocks are overvalued, compared with just 3% who call the market undervalued.

The optimists predict strong returns for stocks through the end of next year. Based on their median forecasts, the Dow industrials, S&P 500, and Nasdaq Composite all will end 2026 with gains of 9% to 10.5% from current levels. Profit growth should drive these gains: Nearly 38% of the Big Money participants say they expect earnings per share for the S&P 500 to rise 6% to 10% from this year's levels, while another 13% forecast earnings-per-share growth of more than 10%.

John Stoltzfus, chief investment strategist at Oppenheimer Asset Management in New York, expects the rally to broaden as AI starts to benefit more sectors. "We can't help but think that AI is already creating efficiencies in the economy," he says.

Eric Clark, chief investment officer at Accuvest Global Advisors in Walnut Creek, Calif., agrees. "The story of 2026 is going to be who Nvidia, Broadcom, and Oracle are building AI for," he says. "When AI is broadly deployed, that will turn into earnings beats for other companies that aren't reflected in certain stocks. There will be huge productivity gains. You've heard about that already from big banks."

Harris Nydick, a founding partner and managing member at CFS Investment Advisory Services in Totowa, N.J., is also bullish. "It has often been the case that a small group of stocks dominate," he says. "But the rest of the market, the other 490 in the S&P 500, are attractive and have a lot going for them. Earnings are strong. Dividends are strong. The consumer is fairly resilient."

Indeed, a variety of stocks outside of tech, including General Motors and 3M, rallied during the week after topping Wall Street's third-quarter earnings forecasts and issuing promising fourth-quarter guidance.

The bulls seem eager to chase the rally as stocks climb. More than two-thirds of Big Money pros say their portfolios have a higher weighting in stocks now than six months ago.

Money managers have benefited this year not only from the U.S. market rally, but also from rallies in other developed markets such as Europe and Japan, and emerging markets such as China and Brazil. Nearly 60% of Big Money poll participants say they boosted their allocation to non-U.S. stocks over the past 12 months, while nearly 40% say they plan to increase their investments in non-U.S. stocks over the next 12 months.

With stocks continuing to climb, 62% say they have reduced their allocation to bonds and cash. They may be shunning the most conservative investments, but two-thirds of poll respondents say they are bullish on gold. The yellow metal has rallied about 57% year to date, to $4,055. It peaked on Monday at $4,398 an ounce. "The price of gold is telling us something," says Walter Christopherson, chairman of Linscomb Wealth in Houston. "There is continued demand from central banks looking to build gold reserves instead of holding the dollar, and individuals looking for alternative investments."

The Big Money bears see trouble brewing in gold's advance and stocks' lofty valuations. They expect the major indexes to fall by 8% to 13.5% through the end of 2026 as the AI trade loses traction and economic concerns weigh on markets. Some 38% of poll respondents think stocks will suffer a bear market, defined as a 20% decline from recent highs, sometime in the next 12 months.

Chris Ryan, CEO of Ryan Investments in Aspen, Colo., says much of the rally since April has been fueled by the fear of missing out, or FOMO. He is focused instead on what he calls JOMO, or the joy of missing out on a potential shakeout in tech stocks such as Palantir Technologies and other Nasdaq highfliers. "Don't get me wrong: AI will change the world, just as the internet did," he says. "But the early AI winners may not be the long-term winners."

Palantir is trading for nearly 205 times next year's earnings estimates. A quarter of Big Money respondents call it the market's most overvalued stock. "I can't wrap my head around the valuation," says Accuvest Global's Clark. "When momentum stocks break, they break aggressively and a lot of people [sell] at once. I respect the company, but the valuation reflects the best of times."

Twenty-one percent of managers say Tesla is the market's most richly valued stock, while 13% bestow the "honor" on Nvidia. Tesla sports a price/earnings ratio of almost 180 times next year's expected earnings, while Nvidia trades for 28 times 2026 estimates.

Nvidia, the leader in AI chips, also has plenty of fans. Five percent of managers call it their favorite stock. "Nvidia is a bellwether for AI," says Nydick. "It is uniquely positioned to keep growing."

Erica Snyder, CEO of Hunter Associates in Pittsburgh, likes tech stocks overall. While there is a good case for market leadership to broaden out, she says, it's encouraging to see companies with strong balance sheets leading in AI spending. AI use is moving from the hype phase to the implementation phase, she notes. If the technology lives up to expectations, corporate margins will widen, boosting earnings growth.

The Big Money managers say an economic slowdown, disappointing earnings, and political turmoil are the biggest near-term risks to the market's advance. Even so, 37% of poll respondents forecast growth of 2% to 3% next year in gross domestic product. Another 25% see GDP increasing just 1.5% next year.

Poll participants don't seem to be cheering many of the White House's economic initiatives. Nearly two-thirds of respondents say they disapprove of President Donald Trump's tariffs, and 58% grade the administration either a C or D for overall fiscal policy since Inauguration Day.

that, in the long run, individuals as a group make better decisions than governments," says Linscomb's Christopherson. "Tariffs are a tax. [They] can be a drag on spending and growth. Tariffs have created market volatility and confusion."

Still, some managers give Trump credit for his willingness to negotiate with other countries on tariffs. "I don't like tariffs, but there has to be greater fairness in trade," says Oppenheimer's Stoltzfus. "This shock-and-awe policy can be awful for the markets, but the deals in the making with Japan, South Korea, the European Union, and Canada are all much friendlier."

Stoltzfus awards the Trump team a B for its economic initiatives.

So does Nydick, who says the administration is correct to take a harder stance on trade with China. "Both the U.S. and China are over their skis in their posturing about tariffs," he says. "But at some point, cooler heads will prevail. There are a lot of reasons the U.S. needs to make a deal with China, but the good news is that there are a lot of reasons for China to make a deal, as well."

Poll respondents have measured praise for the Federal Reserve and its handling of monetary policy. The Fed cut interest rates by a quarter of a percentage point in September, and is expected to cut twice more this year and several times in 2026. Fifty-seven percent of Big Money managers say the Fed's current policy stance is appropriate, compared with 34% who think policy is too tight.

In our spring survey, 70% thought policy was "just right," while 23% thought the Fed should loosen policy and cut rates.

The Fed will be an important story for the financial markets in 2026, as Jerome Powell's term as Fed chair will end in May. Trump, who berated Powell earlier this year for not lowering interest rates, is expected to nominate a replacement later this year.

The Big Money managers are split on their choice of nominee, with 31% favoring current Fed governor Christopher Waller and 30% choosing former Fed governor Kevin Warsh. Both have advocated for more rate cuts. Kevin Hassett, the current director of the National Economic Council and a top Trump adviser, garnered the votes of 18% of poll participants. Hassett may have the inside track, though. He is the favorite, according to prediction markets Kalshi and Polymarket.

No matter whom Trump selects and the Senate confirms, future Fed policy is likely to be biased toward rate cuts, as the labor market has shown recent signs of softness and inflation is expected to moderate. The prospect of lower rates and more fiscal stimulus through deregulation and lower taxes is encouraging many investors to stay in the market.

"This market is way overvalued, but it doesn't mean it's going down," says Sean Sebold, president of Sebold Capital Management in Lisle, Ill. "It depends on what the administration does and what the Fed does. This could be like 1997, and stocks could have a few more years of this craziness. The rally doesn't stop until the money from Washington stops, and I don't see it stopping yet."

In other words, say Sebold and other Big Money bulls, many forces have conspired to produce positive momentum on Wall Street. Stocks may stumble from time to time, but as long as earnings expectations are rising, financial conditions aren't excessively tight, and Washington is supporting the economy, the market's trend is up. Progressive Got Hit on Earnings. Now It's on Sale.

Concerns about the insurer's growth have weighed on its shares, which are down 20% since peaking in April. They now look like a bargain.

BY ANDREW BARY

Progressive is one of America's great financial companies, with a phenomenal record of growth and stock market performance since it went public in 1971.

And now shares are on sale after falling over 20% from their April peak to about $219, including a 5% drop on recent news of a mild earnings disappointment in the September quarter. The stock flirted with a 52-week low on Friday even as the S&P 500 index moved to a new high.

Progressive, the No. 2 U.S. auto insurer, is a financial growth stock, and, unfortunately, growth has been slowing in recent months. Though the company is still expanding rapidly, with automobile insurance policies in force up 15% year over year in September, that number is down from a 20% annual pace earlier this year.

Pricing is coming under pressure too. Auto insurance prices rose by double digits in 2023 and 2024, but Friday's September consumer-price report showed a 0.3% monthly decline in premiums. At the same time, Progressive and its rivals are contending with continuing increases in car-repair costs.

Combined, those factors suggest that Progressive's growth could slow further. Its ample profit margins look set to decline in 2026, resulting in lower earnings relative to 2025.

The stock reaction, however, appears to be another instance of the market putting short-term concerns before the long-term outlook. Progressive still possesses advantages in technology and data that make it the industry leader, while its long-term growth story remains intact. The stock also looks reasonably priced, at 12 times projected 2025 earnings of nearly $18 a share and 13 times estimated 2026 profits of $16.55 a share—especially for one that has been so solid for so long.

"Progressive is a wonderful company," says Greg Locraft, co-manager of the T. Rowe Price Financial Services fund, who calls it "the best-run" auto and homeowner's insurer.

Long-term holders have nothing to complain about. The stock is up over 2,500-fold since Progressive's 1971 initial public offering at a split-adjusted price of about eight cents, and it has outperformed both the S&P 500 and rival Berkshire Hathaway, which owns auto insurer Geico, over the past five, 10, and 20 years.

Why has Progressive done so well? It was early in using telematics, or real-time driving information, and other analytics to price policies. While the company does use brokers, it has a larger presence in the faster-growing business of selling policies directly to consumers. It uses heavy advertising, including its pitchwoman Flo, to build brand awareness. And it empowers its managers in 50 states to price policies based on industry conditions and competitive dynamics.

The proof is in the results. Progressive's revenue rose about 20% in both 2023 and 2024 and is expected to rise 13% this year. Its auto underwriting profit margin of 12% last year was 7.5 points higher than the industry average, according to AM Best, and the gap could be similar this year. Based on its return on equity, Progressive is handily outperforming other top financial companies like JPMorgan Chase and Chubb, as well. "Progressive is a growth machine," says Adam Seessel, chief investment officer at Gravity Capital Management. "It's a technology company that sells insurance."

Progressive has room to expand in a fragmented auto insurance market. With a market share of just 17%—about two percentage points behind No. 1 State Farm—it can take share from smaller insurers without its technology advantage. It may be only a matter of time before it surpasses State Farm, as it did Berkshire's Geico, to become the largest auto insurer in the U.S.

Geico and Progressive used to grow at similar rates, but Progressive sped ahead in recent years. Progressive's auto policies in force are up 75%, to 26.2 million, since the end of 2019, while Geico's dropped about 10%, to about 16 million, Barron's estimates, as it moved to fix technology problems. Berkshire CEO Warren Buffett hailed Geico's "spectacular improvement" in his 2025 annual letter, but it's debatable whether it's anywhere close to Progressive in technology, though margins are now comparable.

Progressive doesn't get the attention of other great financial companies, and that's partially by design. It doesn't meet with institutional investors, avoids industry conferences, and is based outside Cleveland. Still, the company is forthcoming about strategy on its quarterly earnings calls, and it's the only company in the S&P 500 that reports financial results monthly.

Not everything is rosy. High auto insurance rates are becoming a potent political issue, and now prices are flat or falling in states like Florida. Progressive was so profitable in that state following legal reforms in 2023 that it will rebate some $950 million to Florida policyholders starting in 2026, based on outsize earnings from 2023 to 2025 that exceeded statutory limits.

The insurance industry is contending with the high cost of repairing cars, while the rise of self-driving over the next decade could cause accidents to drop, neutralizing some of Progressive's underwriting advantages. The company, however, is expected to exceed its minimum underwriting profit-margin target of 4% and to continue taking market share.

Progressive also has an innovative capital-return program. Like another industry leader, Costco Wholesale, it supplements a tiny regular dividend—now 40 cents annually—with periodic special dividends when it builds up excess capital. Progressive declared a $4.50 special dividend at the end of 2024, and T. Rowe's Locraft expects a similar declaration at the end of 2025 and possibly another in 2026.

Progressive's stock also commands an undemanding valuation. At 12 times 2025 earnings, its price/earnings ratio is well below its 10-year average of 16 and the S&P 500's current 22.

Raymond James analyst Greg Peters recently reiterated what he called an "out of consensus" Outperform rating on the stock, citing his expectation that Progressive will continue to generate above-target profitability. While he cut his price target to $265 from $305 a share, that still suggests more than 20% upside.

When great companies go on sale, it's usually a good time to buy. And Progressive is a great company. B

"Progressive is a growth machine," says one money manager. "It's a technology company that sells insurance."

BY TERESA RIVAS

Pull up your favorite AI chatbot and ask it about the weather for this weekend, how to score the best holiday deals, or to tell you the meaning of life. You've just helped the bull case for Expand Energy.

The company, created by the 2024 merger of Chesapeake Energy and Southwestern Energy, is now the nation's largest natural-gas producer. With an advantageous geographic footprint, ongoing synergies flowing to the bottom line, and growing energy demand, it also looks like one of the best buys in the industry.

"The outlook for natural-gas demand is pretty strong," says Ben Cook, portfolio manager of the Hennessy Midstream fund. "There's an increasing need for it as a fuel source for the power generation facilities that deliver electricity to data centers, and you can't flip the switch on alternatives like nuclear energy overnight.

"Geographically, Expand Energy has an advantage as most of its assets are in northwest Louisiana and the Haynesville Shale, giving it proximity to most of the liquefied natural gas, or LNG, export capacity that is being built out," Cook says.

That will be increasingly valuable as the amount of natural-gas produced goes up. Projecting from current projects, LNG export capacity could double by 2029, the U.S. Energy Information Administration notes, as sustained prices incentivize higher production.

Expand Energy, which is using its robust cash position to do more drilling, is at the forefront of that push.

"Expand Energy offers attractive free-cash-flow growth from rising prices and volumes in 2025-26 as deferred wells are brought online and synergies are realized," writes Morgan Stanley analyst Devin McDermott, whose price target on the stock is $135, up from a recent $103.77.

While the company originally projected some $400 million in annual synergies after its merger, that figure has come in ahead of targets. McDermott pegs it at roughly $600 million a year by the end of 2026 and estimates its free-cash-flow yield will climb from 9% in 2025 to 16% next year. That will also help fund its base and variable dividend yield, which was 3.1% over the past year, as well as ongoing stock buybacks, under its late-2024 $1 billion repurchase authorization.

Julia Schmalz/Bloomberg

An Expand Energy natural-gas production site in Camptown, Pa.

Benchmark analyst Subash Chandra made a similar point in reiterating a Buy rating in early October. The company can grow margins from gas marketing, "as the country's largest gas producer can add meaningfully to free cash flow." he wrote. "We expect the strategy will be fleshed out in ensuing quarters through strategic acquisitions of assets and personnel. Transformation is less the goal than incremental and sustainable growth in free cash flow."

Likewise, consensus estimates call for Expand Energy's earnings to jump by more than two-thirds, from $5.69 in 2025 to $9.63 in 2026. Analysts are by and large an optimistic bunch, but it's worth noting that nearly 90% of the 33 tracked by FactSet rate Expand Energy at Buy or the equivalent—there are no bearish calls on the Street—and the average analyst price target of $131 implies more than 25% upside from current levels.

Investors might be concerned with Expand Energy's volatility, given the stock dropped some 22% from its peak in June through the middle of September. Yet those declines were largely a function of a decline in natural-gas prices, driven in no small part by unfavorable weather trends. That should reverse with a more normal winter, says Cook, and, of course, artificial-intelligence demand isn't weather-dependent.

Global data-center electricity demand is expected to more than double between 2024 and 2030, with much of that coming from AI. Electricity demand from AI-optimized data centers is projected to more than quadruple by 2030. The U.S. is the single largest market for data-center growth.

In fact, the stock has begun to rebound from its summer lows, but Expand Energy still changes hands for a modest 11 times 2026 earnings, despite strong expected growth.

UBS analyst Josh Silverstein raised his estimates ahead of Expand Energy's earnings results, due on Oct. 28, noting that another catalyst could be an update in the search for a new chief financial officer after the departure of the previous CFO in August. Despite the volatility, he says Expand Energy is still "best positioned for rising natural-gas prices next year with the ability to increase volumes and shareholder returns while also reducing debt."

In short, winter is coming. But instead of being a warning, it's welcome news for Expand Energy. Its shareholders may not be able to keep their heating bill from skyrocketing, but they can still profit from it. B

Uncle Sam's New Activism Is Here to Stay

The U.S. is aggressively buying stakes in publicly traded companies. The strategy is winning broad support—and the stocks are flying.

UNCLE SAM IS BECOMING America's most powerful investor, taking big stakes in companies to bolster supply chains and make money for taxpayers. Both goals have bipartisan support, which suggests this new shareholder activism will far outlast President Donald Trump's administration.

Under this unfolding form of American state capitalism, the U.S. is pushing the boundaries of its legal authority to invest billions of dollars in a growing number of companies in return for stock. A third driving force is to beat China, whose control over some materials and manufacturing processes has exposed critical national security weaknesses for the U.S. amid trade tensions.

Under Trump, the government has taken stakes in chip maker Intel and critical minerals firms such as MP Materials and Lithium Americas. Lawyers say some company boards are clamoring to take on the government as a shareholder, while others are wary that they may be forced to give up equity or some sort of control in exchange for permits or other approvals. Some managers believe U.S. investment has given their firms a leg up, although free-market advocates warn there is a litany of examples where government heavy-handedness has had poor consequences for the economy. While some Democrats criticize the moves as lacking strategy, the taking of equity stakes in some cases has bipartisan support.

Trump officials say they're just getting started. Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent has said the White House is homing in on industries critical to U.S. national sean overreliance on China, which government officials say has manipulated prices to undercut U.S. industries and give itself a strategic advantage.

"I wouldn't be surprised" if the U.S. took more stakes in private companies, Bessent said at a CNBC event on Oct 15. "When you are facing a non-market economy like China, then you have to exercise industrial policy."

Just as often, the White House's targets seem to be ones of opportunity. The U.S. took its stake in Intel days after Trump called for the ouster of its CEO, with Trump arguing that he was rectifying an unfair deal for taxpayers made by President Joe Biden's administration. In November 2024, the Biden administration announced that Intel would receive nearly $8 billion in grants to support the company's $100 billion investment in building semiconductor projects in the U.S., but the U.S. didn't receive any equity as part of the deal.

In addition to its national security goals, White House and cabinet officials say they want to make money for taxpayers. "Why are we giving a company worth $100 billion this kind of money? What is in it for the American taxpayer? And the answer Donald Trump has is we should get an equity stake for our money," U.S. Commerce Secretary Howard Lutnick told CNBC as the Intel stake was completed.

The Defense Department invested $400 million in July in MP Materials, which operates a rare-earth mine in California. The preferred stock and warrant for common stock give the government a 15% stake in the company, making the U.S. its largest shareholder. As part of the deal, the government also guaranteed a minimum price for some of its rare-earth products and said the Pentagon would find customers for 100% of the magnets produced at a new facility for a decade after its completion.

This month, the government struck two more critical minerals deals, taking 5% stakes in Vancouver-based Lithium Americas and in one of its joint ventures, and a 10% stake in Vancouver-based Trilogy Metals, with warrants to acquire another 7.5% of the company. In addition to the money, the U.S. approved a 211-mile road for a mineral project in Alaska, reversing a decision made by Biden.

A U.S. investment is "enormously accelerating and transformational and valuable," says Brian Menell, CEO of TechMet, a mining and mineral investments company. The first Trump administration invested $25 million in TechMet in 2020 through the U.S. International Development Finance Corp., which Congress originally created in 2018 to support development projects in low-income countries. The DFC during the Biden administration invested another $80 million.

A U.S. equity investment de-risks projects in the eyes of other investors and foreign governments. Menell says the U.S. involvement was a major selling point when TechMet raised $180 million from the Qatar Investment Authority. "Governments around the world are very respectful of U.S. interests, unless they're completely stupid," Menell says. "It's been positive for us everywhere."

Despite talk early in the administration of creating a sovereign-wealth fund, the White House says it isn't seeking to build a large portfolio of U.S. companies. It sees equity stakes as just part of its tool kit to firm up the U.S. supply chain. "The point with equity stakes is that the president is making sure the taxpayer isn't needlessly giving out money with no strings attached," said a White House official, who called any financial returns to taxpayers an "ancillary benefit" to national security interests.

There is no one person at the White House tasked with overseeing a portfolio of investments, the official said.

Critics note that taking stock in a company doesn't necessarily do much to firm up supply chains. The U.S.'s original deal with Intel provided the company with grants, loans, and tax incentives in exchange for the company meeting certain milestones to build semiconductor projects in the U.S., an endeavor that Intel and other chip makers said wasn't otherwise economically viable. As part of the deal to convert the grants and loans into equity, the Trump White House removed the milestones.

Some deals have given the U.S. influence over corporate actions but without any stock. In August, Nvidia and Advanced Micro Devices agreed to give the U.S. 15% of their revenue from artificial-intelligence chip sales to China in exchange for export licenses. Later in the month, the White House said the deal hadn't been finalized—and China banned the chip sales, in any case. An Nvidia spokesman declined to comment. AMD didn't respond to a request for comment.

As a condition for approving the sale of U.S. Steel to Japan's Nippon Steel, the government received a so-called "golden share," giving it veto power over some corporate actions.

"These demands to take a percentage of profits or actual equity ownership to operate in different markets are nothing more than extortion schemes," says Jeffrey Sonnenfeld, president of the Yale Chief Executive Leadership Institute.

The rare-earth deals have kicked off a gold rush among companies looking to see if they can get Uncle Sam as an investor, as well. Just this past week, The Wall Street Journal reported that some quantum computing companies are in discussions to give the Commerce Department equity stakes in exchange for funding.

Y. David Scharf, one of Trump's former attorneys, says 20 to 30 companies—in industries ranging from critical minerals to manufacturing and robotics—have reached out to him to see if he could help line up a U.S. investment, which he has whittled down to a "handful" for pitches to government agencies. Although the investment discussions are often to further national security interests, he says government officials are also looking for a positive investment return. "Everyone is working across the table from each other to make money," says Scharf.

The government hasn't released a comprehensive accounting of what it has made from its investments, but anecdotally, the returns so far are robust.

TechMet's Menell says the government has made 30% annually on its investment in the private company. MP Materials recently traded at around $83, more than double the conversion and exercise price that the company gave the government in its funding deal. In exchange for deferring $184 million in debt payments, the government received 5% of Lithium Americas, a stake worth $93 million. And, in perhaps its most lucrative investment, the government in August agreed to buy 9.9% of Intel at $20.47 per share, a discount to the market price. The stock recently traded at around $38.

On its face, the government's terms have often looked dilutive to private shareholders. But in the early days, a U.S. investment has almost always been accompanied by a surge in the target's share price. Shareholders have enjoyed gains alongside the government.

Trump officials have pointed to several industries they view as critical to national security interests that could end up getting U.S. investments. Lutnick and Trump in interviews have suggested that defense contractors, who often have the U.S. as their biggest or only customer, could be targets. At the CNBC event on Oct. 15, Bessent said that the U.S. had identified seven critical industries where equity stakes might be on the table, but didn't name them. "We're not going to come in and take stakes in nonstrategic industries," he said. "We do have to be very careful not to overreach."

The Treasury Department didn't respond to requests for comment on what the seven industries are.

In many cases, the government is giving support to industries that traditionally have found it too risky or expensive to operate in the U.S. Setting up a rare earths mine is risky even before taking into account the minerals' highly volatile prices. Steel companies for years have said they can't compete with China's state-sponsored companies, which sell some forms of steel at prices that would cause the U.S. firms to lose money. Congress passed the Chips and Science Act in 2022 in part because nearly all advanced chipmaking happens in Taiwan.

"There's a shared bipartisan sense that these are sectors and industries that we want to make sure we have good domestic production and stockpiles of," says Beacon Policy Advisors analyst Owen Tedford. "There is some degree of shared bipartisan belief that, even if the method isn't the best, the outcome will be worthwhile in the long term."

The government's track record in taking equity stakes is mixed. To help stabilize the financial system, the U.S. in 2008 under the Troubled Asset Relief Program took equity stakes in major banks, insurer American International Group, and auto companies. Government officials in 2014 said they had recovered $441.7 billion from those investments, compared with $426.4 billion disbursed—a positive return, but one that critics say wasn't commensurate with the risk.

Although taking equity stakes outside of crises is unusual, legal experts say there's nothing inherently illegal about it. Congress authorized the government to take stock in companies through the International Development Finance Corp., which has made some rare-earth deals. The act that enabled the funding for the Intel deal didn't explicitly talk about the U.S. taking shares, but it didn't prohibit it, either. And since Intel voluntarily entered the agreement, it isn't clear who would sue.

"So long as the companies formally consent to the government shares, the government is unlikely to face lawsuits in court," wrote former Biden White House official Peter Harrell on the Lawfare website.

The push for government equity stakes may even continue if a Democrat wins the White House. Sen. Bernie Sanders (Ind., Vt.) praised the Intel deal in a statement, saying that "the taxpayers of America have a right to a reasonable return" in exchange for grants to chip makers. Some officials from the Biden White House say there's nothing inherently wrong with the tactic of taking equity in exchange for government help.

"An equity stake is an industrial policy tool just like a grant, a tax credit, a loan, or a tariff. They can be used in smart and strategic ways, but also be used in clumsy and misapplied ways," says Alex Jacquez, chief of policy and advocacy at Groundwork Collaborative and a former White House official in Biden's National Economic Council. Jacquez says Trump seemed to be treating the equity investments as "a vanity play" and "personal portfolio."

The chief executives of some of America's top corporations sounded alarm bells at a gathering last month in Washington. They expressed acute anxiety that Trump is asserting unprecedented control over company governance. "They view this as a huge mistake," says Sonnenfeld, who organized the meeting.

Many leaders of large companies blanch at the government taking equity but won't speak out in public for fear of becoming a Trump target, says Sonnenfeld. What's more, some of them see winning U.S. government support as a way to undercut rivals and get a short-term opportunity "to get a brief stock pop," he says.

In the longer term, there's a risk of government heavy-handedness undermining the conditions that have made the U.S. economy successful relative to its peers, says Norbert Michel, a vice president at the Cato Institute, a libertarian think tank. "You don't have to go too far to get to a completely different economic system," Michel says. "There's no clearly defined line that says, 'Well, if you only have the government taking a 5% stake in five companies, then it's not fascism or not socialism.' We shouldn't be doing this, because that's where this leads."

What comes after the U.S. builds its portfolio is mostly unknown. With Intel, the White House agreed not to take governance rights. But it has already put its thumb on the scale in other arrangements. Trump exercised his U.S. Steel veto power for the first time last month, blocking a decision to stop processing raw steel at a plant in Illinois. A White House official in September told Barron's that stopping processing was "perhaps a sensible business decision," but against U.S. interests.

A U.S. Steel spokeswoman says there would have been no layoffs, in any case, and called the Trump administration "a great friend to the American steel industry." B

Uncle Sam's Growing Influence

24-Hour Trading Is Coming. Wall Street Isn't Ready.

Extended trading could change everything from staffing models to market volatility. What happens when a bank collapses at 1 a.m.?

BY DAVID WIGNALL

Wall Street employees agree that 24-hour trading is inevitable. That doesn't mean they're happy about it.

For years, investors hoping to trade U.S. equities on major exchanges were confined to the traditional hours of 9:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. ET, five days a week. Some exchanges also offered "extended hours," starting at 4 a.m. and ending at 8 p.m.

But soon, round-the-clock equity trading will be the new normal. The New York Stock Exchange, Nasdaq, and the London Stock Exchange are all weighing plans to extend weekday trading deep into the night. Robinhood Markets, Interactive Brokers, Firsttrade, and Charles Schwab all already offer 24-hour trading five days a week for many stocks. And a key market infrastructure provider, the Depository Trust & Clearing Corp., says it is preparing to accommodate round-the-clock trading as soon as the second quarter of 2026.

For now, the weekend is still off limits. But finance professionals across Wall Street are watching the advance of 24-hour trading with trepidation. They wonder: Will asset managers need to staff their offices at midnight? Will nighttime liquidity harm retail investors? What happens if a bank collapses at 1 a.m.?

Jenny Hadiaris, head of North America electronic execution at Citigroup, says that while retail clients are excited about round-the-clock trading, "institutional investors have been a lot more tepid on this." She adds, "It's a huge lift. It's a massive lift for the Street."

Financial advisors also see potential trouble ahead. "Imagine going through Covid-19, the fastest drop in history, with a market that never closes," says Peter Mallouk, president of Creative Planning, a large wealth manager. "We are not staffed for round-the-clock client assistance."

The Push for Round-the-Clock

Exchanges are moving to round-the-clock trading for many reasons. They want to cater to Asian retail investors, who are increasingly interested in big-name U.S. stocks like Nvidia and Microsoft. They are following the lead of cryptocurrency and commodities markets, which already trade continuously. And they want to encourage more foreign companies to list their stocks in the U.S.

Some wonder whether the appetite is even there. Just 11% of overall trading volume in 2025 took place outside the traditional 9:30 a.m. to 4 p.m., according to Nasdaq. Trading from 8 p.m. to 4 a.m. is even thinner, accounting for only 0.2% of total volume.

But some traders and exchanges are hoping that NYSE and Nasdaq's moves will induce additional activity. "Us coming into the market will likely unlock additional demand," says Chuck Mack, senior vice president for North American markets at Nasdaq.

If that demand materializes, it could be a tremendous boon for traders and exchanges, since both typically profit when more people are buying and selling stocks. But when there is no closing bell, it could also disrupt life on Wall Street. "It doesn't matter what your view is," says Hadiaris. "There's pros. There's cons. It doesn't matter—it's coming."

Wide Spreads and Flash Crashes

In conversations with Barron's, more than a dozen financial professionals voiced a variety of concerns regarding the impact of 24-hour trading—though they also stressed that the change is inevitable.

Many worry about liquidity and execution. When few participants are trading, market makers must hold on to shares for longer. To compensate for the increased risk, they widen their bid/ask spreads—the gap between the cost of buying and selling shares. At night, when almost no one is trading and not all market makers are offering their services, spreads can be unusually wide.

If unsuspecting investors place orders at night when spreads are broad, they will effectively receive worse prices than if they wait for daylight.

"A lot of people don't realize that they're likely to do far worse in terms of price if they're going to trade overnight," says Benjamin Schiffrin, director of securities policy at Better Markets, an advocacy group. Schiffrin believes that if overnight trading is conducted on exchanges, spreads could narrow somewhat, but far more retail investors would be exposed to the risks.

Low liquidity wouldn't just harm individual investors. If an investor places a large sell order and there are few buyers available, prices could fall, potentially triggering additional automated selling. "There could be many flash crashes," says Lynn Challenger, global head of trading at UBS asset management. When the market is thin, anybody buying or selling at the wrong moment could lose their shirt.

In the short term, many trading experts expect liquidity to be extremely thin between 8 p.m. and 4 a.m. But volumes could pick up when big events occur, like a presidential election or geopolitical crisis.

Pressure on People and Plumbing

Many traders and investors have come to appreciate the closing bell. After 4 p.m., they have ample time to clean up their books, meet with co-workers, schmooze with clients, and grab some sleep. While asset prices technically move overnight, the tape is out of sight and volume is thin.

In a continuously trading world, stock-price movements would always be in view. "I think for the equities traders, it'll be a new level of stress and anxiety because they will never get a break," says John Shammas, chief growth officer at DriveWealth, a financial-technology company that helps investors operate overnight. "For the futures and options traders, they're used to this" because those assets already trade at nearly all hours.

Investors who enjoy an evening cocktail aren't the only ones who rely on the closing bell. Currently, exchanges and brokers use the dead of night to handle a host of rarely thought-of functions. Trades must be settled, closing prices recorded, stocks split, mistakes reversed, and dividends paid. In a round-the-clock world, it's still unclear how the market plumbing will operate. "Most broker-dealers are used to having a six-plus-hour period when they can do all their corporate action processing," says Shammas.

Staffing is an obvious issue. "If the market's going to be open, regardless of whether there's a lot of liquidity or not, it could create price risk for investors," says Michael Cyprys, an equity analyst at Morgan Stanley. Someone will need to be awake to manage that risk, at least at firms with demanding clients.

The Securities Industry and Financial Markets Association, a trade group, noted in a Securities and Exchange Commission filing that "overnight on-exchange trading will require additional staffing at regulators, firms, and third-party service providers" to monitor systems and respond to clients. The trade group asked: "Who pays for these increased costs?"

Those costs could fuel further consolidation. Many large traders and asset managers already have staff awake at all hours. If a price moves while New York is asleep, employees in Singapore are able to respond. But smaller firms without global presences will be out of luck.

Who Will Benefit?

Many finance professionals are also wondering what might happen when market-shifting news happens during the wee hours. On the one hand, overnight exchange trading will allow more asset managers to respond to events in real time, so their portfolios will always reflect their views on current information. On the other, overnight trading—especially when more retail investors get involved—could cause investors to respond impulsively. Rather than waiting until morning, when cooler heads may prevail, investors could jump into the fray right away.

"It heightens the probability that you get an emotional response to market events," says Kristi Mitchem, a founder of wealth manager &Partners who was previously CEO of Wells Fargo asset management.

If investors react impulsively, the people who benefit will be the professionals: the hedge funds, proprietary traders, and algorithmic funds who already dominate pre- and postmarket trading and can take advantage of irrationally priced assets.

"My view of 24-hour trading is it has little benefit," says Victor Haghani, a wealth manager who co-founded Long-Term Capital Management. "It's just going to facilitate a greater redistribution of wealth from retail speculators to proprietary traders."

The rise of 24-hour trading could also privilege high-speed, computerized operations. Under the current system, there is little benefit to reading a news release at 8 p.m. as opposed to 8:05 p.m. All investors have to wait until the morning to place their trades, giving everyone ample time to receive and digest information. But if the exchanges are open when news arrives, reaction time may become more important. Using machine learning and web scraping tools to consume information—already par for the course for some funds operating in the daytime—could become even more important.

A senior trading executive at a large U.S. bank noted that overnight trading could exacerbate market contagion. The executive observed that, during the collapse of Bear Stearns in March 2008, regulators and executives had several nights and a weekend to organize a bailout and sale of the beleaguered bank. That breathing room may soon be in short supply.

"Imagine if when GameStop was happening, the markets were open 24/7," says Better Markets' Schiffrin. "I think it was hard enough for the SEC and others to understand what was transpiring in the market then."

Skeptical of the benefits and wary of thin liquidity, many investors say they are planning to stay away from overnight trading and expect others to do the same. "Buy-and-hold and institutional investors would probably sit on the sidelines," says Michael Arone, chief investment strategist at State Street.

That could create a chicken-and-egg scenario. If institutional investors don't provide overnight liquidity, then trading volumes will remain low, making nighttime trading less appealing to institutional investors. The graveyard shift will become the domain of retail investors and specialized firms.

But competitive pressure may compel asset managers and traders to build overnight capabilities anyway. "If I don't get that type of service from one counterpart, I will go to the next one who provides it," says Vineer Bhansali, founder and chief investment officer of LongTail Alpha, a hedge fund. "We're talking about millions of dollars of opportunity loss."

Overnight trading will catch on, Shammas predicts. "This is going to be a feature like fractional shares, where it's going to be something that everyone has over the next five years." Some brokers may never be able to support 24-hour monitoring due to technical inefficiency, he says, "but customers will demand and expect it."

What Investors Should Do

How should investors prepare for continuous trading? It's a question many on Wall Street may have to answer—soon. For most investors without vast tools at their disposal, the optimal strategy remains buy and hold. Trying to time the market is perilous; timing the market when spreads are wide is even worse.

But LongTail Alpha's Bhansali says investors should have a plan to rebalance their portfolio if market disruptions happen overnight.

When Bhansali started his Wall Street career more than three decades ago, repositioning a portfolio was a lengthy process. "Going back to 1994, it used to take months," he says. "In 2008 to 2010, it was weeks. And then, suddenly, time started to get compressed," he says. "Now, it has gone from minutes to seconds." He sees 24-hour trading as an extension of this broader acceleration. In a world where news happens at all hours, portfolio managers need to be ready to respond within seconds, and trades need to be prestaged. "When the event happens, all you can do at that point is literally route the trades," he says.

The old daytime trading system—developed when stocks needed to be traded in-person—looks increasingly quaint. "It's silly that the market closes at all," says Creative Planning's Mallouk. "But I think it will be unfortunate, in the sense that the market is a point of stress for a lot of people. And having it go nonstop, all the time, will make for a lot more anxiety." B

Single-Country ETFs Can Hedge Your U.S. Risk

BY LEWIS BRAHAM

When the U.S. sneezes, the rest of the world catches a cold. Or so the Wall Street saying about foreign stocks goes.

The notion that all stocks worldwide rise together and move in lockstep downward is a common perception. But in 2022, when the S&P 500 index plummeted 18% because of high inflation, the iShares MSCI Chile exchange-traded fund (ticker: ECH) was up 24%, the iShares MSCI Brazil ETF (EWZ) rose 13%, the WisdomTree Japan Hedged Equity ETF (DXJ) was up 8%, and the Global X MSCI Greece ETF (GREK) rose 3%. The volatile iShares MSCI Turkey ETF (TUR) was up 106%.

Such wide-ranging performance proves a lesser-known Wall Street saying: There's always a bull market somewhere. While many U.S. investors seek overseas diversification through broad index funds such as the $545 billion Vanguard Total International Stock ETF (VXUS), these aren't the best choices, as many large multinational companies—which have the biggest weightings in international indexes—often have significant exposure to the U.S. economy and markets. The Vanguard ETF was down 16% in 2022, and large-cap companies still account for almost 80% of its portfolio, according to Morningstar.

It would be foolish to invest your entire stock portfolio in a volatile single-country fund. But when added to a U.S.-centric portfolio, single-country funds can actually reduce one's overall risk by acting differently than the S&P 500, sometimes rising when U.S. stocks fall, or at least falling less.

U.S. stock correlation shouldn't be the only reason to consider a country fund. Valuations and macroeconomic factors play a role, too. Malcolm Dorson, a senior portfolio manager at Global X ETFs, which runs nine single-country ETFs, says Vietnam and Greece are undergoing structural changes to their economies and markets that give them advantages. After years of struggling for global respectability, both are being upgraded by benchmark designers such as FTSE and MSCI because of recent economic strength—from a frontier to emerging market in Vietnam's case, and from an emerging to developed market in Greece's. This will cause assets to flow into their securities from index funds, driving returns higher.

"All three sovereign rating agencies upgraded Greece's debt to investment grade over the past year, and FTSE has [recently announced it will] classify it as a developed market in September 2026," Dorson says. It's a similar story with Vietnam, with the added benefit that U.S. companies seeking to outsource their manufacturing are now using Vietnam instead of China, hoping to skirt trade tensions.

Dorson calls Vietnam "a friend-shoring alternative to China in terms of being a trade partner and manufacturing center."

According to Morningstar Direct, the Global X MSCI Vietnam ETF's (VNAM) portfolio has an average trailing 12-month price/earnings ratio of 20 versus the S&P 500's 28, despite the fact the ETF is up 59% this year. The Global X MSCI Greece ETF has an 11 P/E and is up 64%. According to Global X, in the past three years, the Vietnam ETF's correlation with S&P 500 price moves has been 30% and the Greece ETF's 50%, indicating differentiated performance. The two country ETFs had only a 19% correlation with each other, so they could be combined for even greater diversity.

Four firms offer the most single-country ETFs—BlackRock's iShares, Global X, VanEck, and Franklin Templeton. Investment strategists at both BlackRock and Franklin Templeton currently favor Korea ETFs as a portfolio overweight. Kristy Akullian, head of iShares investment strategy for the Americas, sees Korea—a semiconductor manufacturing leader—as a cheaper way to play the artificial-intelligence chip trend.

When used to supplement a U.S.-centric portfolio, these ETFs could zig when the S&P 500 zags. B

THE ECONOMY

The Federal Reserve's balance sheet has shrunk, from a peak of nearly $9 trillion in April 2022 to $6.6 trillion.

The Fed Will Soon End QT to Avoid a 'Plumbing' Problem

BY RANDALL W. FORSYTH

The headlines from the Federal Open Market Committee's policy-decision meeting this coming week will, to use journalists' jargon, likely bury the lede.

They will dutifully report that the Federal Reserve is lowering its target for the federal-funds rate by one-quarter percentage point, from the presently prevailing 4% to 4.25% range. This will come as no surprise given that the fed-funds futures market placed a 96.7% probability on this outcome on Friday, according to the CME FedWatch site.

Far more important than that foregone conclusion is what the central bank will do with its balance sheet, a topic typically given short shrift at Fed Chair Jerome Powell's post-FOMC press conference, which will take place this coming Wednesday afternoon. Look for the FOMC to announce an end to quantitative tightening, or QT—its systematic reduction of assets—to begin almost immediately.

This is a matter of some importance to investors. The Fed's security holdings affect the liquidity available to the economy and, less obviously, the plumbing of the financial markets. And as many homeowners have found to their chagrin, plumbing works silently in the background—until it doesn't, with messy and even catastrophic aftereffects.

As the central bank's balance sheet has shrunk, from a peak of nearly $9 trillion in April 2022 to $6.6 trillion in the week ended this past Wednesday, the volume of bank reserves has also declined (see chart below). Not to get too deeply into money-market mechanics, reserves have fallen to the point where some short-term borrowers recently have had to pay up. Specifically, the SOFR (secured overnight financing rate) has recently topped the Fed's IORB (interest rate on reserve balances), an indication that reserves have grown less ample.

To be sure, that is nothing like the "repocalypse" of September 2019, when the cost of repurchase agreements—borrowings collateralized by Treasury securities—temporarily soared to 9%. The top of the fed-funds target range was then 2.25%, but the Fed was also near the end of winding down its balance sheet, that is, QT.

Preventing any similar disruption in funding markets is likely to be a priority for the Fed now, says James Bianco, the eponymous founder of Bianco Research. After that misstep and the Fed's epic fail about "transitory inflation" earlier in this decade, Powell & Co. are apt to be especially careful to avoid unnecessary market disturbance with pressure put on it by the Trump administration, he said on a client webcast on Thursday.

Other financial-market indicators pointing in the opposite direction also argue in favor of ending QT. The bankruptcies of First Brands and Tricolor are sure to elicit questions at Powell's presser about emerging cracks in credit. The cockroaches become more visible when liquidity dries up, Bianco pithily observed, alluding to JPMorgan Chase CEO Jamie Dimon's description of the possible spread of credit losses.

Tightening liquidity also threatens the equity market's advance, says Steven Blitz, managing director for global macro and strategy at TS Lombard. "Given how equities are the linchpin keeping this economy afloat, the Fed is not going to let macro arguments get in the way of supporting stocks," he wrote in a client note on Friday.

Similarly, major stock averages' continuous march to records is "testament to the view that the S&P 500 has become completely disconnected from the real economy," David Rosenberg, of Rosenberg Research, wrote this past week. He has prepared an artificial-intelligence-driven analysis of the Fed's Beige Book (the compendium of reports prepared for the FOMC), to fill the gap created by the absence of official data during the government shutdown.

Rosenberg finds just 18% of the U.S. in expansion mode, down from 43% six weeks earlier. That's the lowest percentage since May 2020; prior to the pandemic, you would have to go back to July 2009, during the recession that followed the financial crisis, to find such a depressed reading.

Inflation, meanwhile, remains sticky, even after a slightly lower-than-expected increase in the consumer price index reported on Friday during the ongoing shuttering of the government. Overall CPI was up 0.3% in September while the core measure (excluding food and energy) was up 0.2% for the month, which was helped by a smaller-than-expected 0.1% increase in so-called owners' equivalent rent. On a year-over-year basis, both measures were up 3%.

Parsing the pieces of the report, John Ryding, Brean Capital's chief economic adviser, points to tariff pressures pushing up apparel and footwear and household equipment prices. Away from trade, service prices excluding housing continue to be "troubling," he added in a client note on Friday. The Fed's so-called Supercore gauge (core services excluding housing) climbed at a 4.7% annual rate over the most recent three months.

With the Fed emphasizing softening in the labor market despite the stalled progress in reaching its 2% inflation target, quarter-point rate cuts are fully priced in for this FOMC meeting and the December confab. For 2026, the market sees two additional quarter-point reductions, to a midpoint of 2.875% by year end, under the current pace of inflation. That is also well below the end-2026 median FOMC dot plot of 3.4%, as well as those of Bank of America's rates strategists, they write in a research note.

These market expectations should be viewed similarly to pregame betting lines, Bianco says. The Kansas City Chiefs were favored to win this year's Super Bowl but got trounced by the Philadelphia Eagles, 40-22, he notes. Of course, the lineup at the Fed will be different next year, with Powell's term as chair ending in May.

The Fed is likely to prevent any clogs in the plumbing of the money markets by ending QT. But financial conditions are easy. Along with record stock prices, the credit markets are booming, with a record $38 billion deal being readied for data centers tied to Oracle, Bloomberg reported. Market expectations of the Fed bringing the funds rate below inflation next year may turn out like bets on Mahomes & Co. this past February. B

Dwindling Reserves

As the Fed has reduced its balance sheet, banks' reserves also have fallen, according to monthly data through August. The latest weekly numbers though Oct. 22 show a further drop below $3 trillion.

INCOME INVESTING

The Other Reason To Buy Dividend Stocks

BY AL ROOT

Dividends aren't just for income investors. In fact, they may be among the minority buying income-focused stocks and funds.

The entire fund industry orients products to different types of investors. Want to invest in rare earth materials or space? There are funds for that. Want to double or triple a bearish bet against Tesla? There are funds for that, too. Income-seeking investors have exchange-traded funds such as Vanguard High Dividend Yield and Schwab US Dividend Equity, while investors primarily seeking capital appreciation have options such as the Vanguard US Growth fund or the SPDR S&P 500 ETF.

That's not quite how it works in practice. Sharon Hill, Vanguard senior portfolio manager and head of equity global and income, notes that on days when the funds she helps manage, including Vanguard Equity Income, were due to pay out dividend income, she didn't have to raise capital to fund it—something that should have happened if investors were taking the money and using it elsewhere. "I thought, 'I wonder why that is?' " Hill says. "And the answer is because most of our investors have an auto-reinvest feature turned on."

It turns out that income-oriented investors are no more likely to withdraw dividends than those in ordinary equity funds, with some three-quarters of the former opting to reinvest their payouts.

Wanting to know more, Hill reached out to Vanguard's clients, collecting some 5,000 responses to help solve the puzzle. She discovered that investors view dividend-paying funds as a way to diversify their portfolios. Dividend-paying companies are different kinds of firms from those with no quarterly payouts. The highest 20% of dividend yields in the S&P 500, including stocks such as United Parcel Service and Pfizer, are value names, older businesses that yield an average of 4.5% and trade for an average of 19 times 12-month forward earnings, while the roughly 100 stocks in the index that don't pay a dividend—Amazon.com and Palantir Technologies among them—trade for an average of 36 times estimated earnings.

Hill also found that investors think companies that pay a dividend care more about their shareholders, are more "trustworthy," and "better stewards of capital." There is some reason for that. In the 1990s, buying stocks with higher yields led to stock market outperformance. That hasn't been the case lately, however, with low- or zero-yielding technology stocks leading the market.

It isn't as if investors are averse to having income if they need it. Vanguard found that the option of having cash if needed is another reason cited for buying high-yielding funds, even if investors don't need it immediately. Of course, they can sell shares or funds to raise capital, but the assurance of quarterly payouts helps investors get over the fear of being forced to sell when shares take a dip.

Regular payouts aren't cost-free. Dividends are taxed whether reinvested or not, says accounting expert Robert Willens, though that can be offset for long-term investors because they also raise the cost basis of a portfolio position, softening the tax burden when the asset is sold.

Interest rates can affect dividend payers differently. In theory, a steepening yield curve, the situation investors find themselves in today, benefits higher-yielding stocks more than lower-yielding companies. Stocks aren't bonds, but a higher-yielding stock looks that much better when money-market rates are falling, if long-term bond yields don't budge.

If dividend funds aren't only for the dividends, then investors—and fund managers—should make sure to pay attention not only to the size of the yield, but to the quality of the companies in any actively managed dividend fund, as well.

Quality diversification is, after all, what most investors really want. B

TECH TRADER

No other Big Tech company has expended as much money or effort to restructure its business model for AI. Will it be enough?

In This AI Moment, Meta Disrupts Itself. That's a Good Thing.

BY ADAM LEVINE

Meta Platforms CEO Mark Zuckerberg is on a mission, and it's the same one he has been on since Facebook became the dominant social-media site in the 2010s: Don't be disrupted, and be willing to disrupt yourself. This past week, he continued down the path of shaking up Meta for the artificial-intelligence age by finding creative private financing to fund Meta's enormous capital commitments. For good measure, he also shook up his staff.

In a business where, as former Intel CEO Andy Grove so famously said, "only the paranoid survive," Zuckerberg continues to stand out as the most paranoid of CEOs.

Meta may still struggle to stay ahead in this AI moment, but it won't be because the company didn't try hard enough. The company is on pace to spend about $70 billion this year on new AI data centers, with much more promised. Alone among the big capital investors in AI, Meta is buying all this computing capacity for its own use, not to rent out to customers in the cloud.

And the capital expenditures are beginning to weigh on Meta's financials, though operations continue to excel, with operating profits up 38% in the second quarter. The stock is up 25% for the year, compared with 19% for the tech-heavy Nasdaq 100.

Even with operational cash flows growing quickly in 2024 and 2025—some $102 billion in the past 12 months—cash flow is beginning to decline once you subtract capex. Operational cash flows alone aren't going to be enough to fund Zuckerberg's AI data-center ambitions, so Meta is tapping outside financing. The company added over $10 billion in new debt last year. In the second quarter, its debt and lease liabilities exceeded its cash and short-term investments for the first time.

And this past week, Meta got creative. The company came up with a way to fund its massive Hyperion data center in Louisiana, which is already under construction. Meta forged a joint venture with investment manger Blue Owl Capital, which will own the site, though Meta will be its only customer for at least the next four years. Meta will own only 20% of the JV, so it won't appear on the company's consolidated balance sheet. Nor will the capex hit its cash-flow statement. Blue Owl will own the remainder, adding $7 billion of its own money to bonds sold to Pimco and other lenders.

Meta will also be contributing land and building assets valued at up to $3.3 billion in June, though the company may have added other Hyperion assets since then. Meta will also receive a $3 billion payout from the JV. Neither Meta nor Blue Owl responded to a Barron's request for comment on the venture.

Ultimately, Zuckerberg believes that he needs all of this computing capacity to serve up AI to the 3.5 billion people who visit at least one of Meta's apps every day. Zuckerberg wants to create AI language models that can compete with the best in the business, powering new user experiences and better ad-targeting across its products. There is already evidence that Meta is seeing success in using AI to increase ad sales.

But Zuckerberg also fears that its AI models are falling behind ones that power OpenAI's ChatGPT, still the leader. Meta released its Llama 4 models in April to little acclaim, and Zuckerberg then decided he had to disrupt his own AI engineering teams.

Beginning in June, Meta went on a hiring spree that isn't done yet, reportedly offering nine-figure multiyear deals to the world's top AI researchers. The primary gambit was to buy 49% of Scale AI at a $29 billion valuation, double what it had been after its previous fund-raising round. Scale AI's CEO, Alexandr Wang, became chief AI officer for the newly formed Meta Superintelligence Labs, overseeing AI research. Among the teams below him, TBD Lab houses the new pricey scientists, who will work on future AI models, and the Fundamental AI Research Team, or FAIR, which had been developing the Llama models.

Zuckerberg thus upended the organization. FAIR and longtime Chief AI Scientist Yann LeCun receded into the background, and one of the new hires, Shengjia Zhao, now also holds a chief scientist title.

With the structure a mess from new hiring and shifting responsibilities, Meta moved this week to make more sense of it all. On Wednesday, Axios reported that the company will begin to lay off 600 workers across its AI units in a reorganization effort. The layoffs are happening outside of TBD Lab—indeed, TBD is still hiring. The New York Times estimates Meta's total AI staff at about 3,000.

All of this is why Zuckerberg remains one of the best CEOs in tech. He never rests on yesterday's successes and doesn't get complacent. In the 2010s, even as Facebook became the dominant social-media site, he fretted endlessly about competition from Google, Foursquare, Pinterest, and Snapchat, and that worrying is one reason none of them surpassed Meta.

"Move fast and break things" was the early Facebook corporate mantra, and now that spirit is back. No other Big Tech company has expended as much money or effort to restructure its business model for AI. But even that doesn't guarantee success, as Zuckerberg would probably be the first to say. B

Mark Zuckerberg fears that Meta's AI models are falling behind ones that power OpenAI's ChatGPT. Meta released its Llama 4 models in April to little acclaim, and Zuckerberg then decided he had to disrupt his own AI engineering teams.

Q&A

An Interview With Sonali Pier
Portfolio Manager, Pimco

What a 'Go Anywhere' Bond Pro Likes Now

BY AMEY STONE

Fixed-income investors got a one-two punch in mid-October: first, with the bankruptcy-protection filing of First Brands, a heavily indebted auto-parts company, and then, separately, when two regional banks had to write down losses on bad loans.

Fraud was alleged, credit spreads widened, bank stocks fell, and Sonali Pier, a portfolio manager at Pimco focusing on multisector credit, assembled her team. With characteristic understatement she tells Barron's, "We had some conversations about it."

The task at hand wasn't just to review holdings in the bond portfolios she oversees, including the $8.5 billion Pimco Multisector Bond Active exchange-traded fund, but to prepare for investment opportunities to emerge. She isn't looking for distressed bonds at bargain prices. Instead, she wants to be in a position to add more high-quality bonds—the good stuff that other investors may have no choice but to sell when facing redemptions.

Credit markets have stabilized for now, but rocky times afford a defensively oriented fund like the Pimco ETF a chance to shine. The fund was up 8.4% in the past year, putting it in the top 7% of all U.S. multisector bond funds, according to Morningstar. The fund's 6.6% distribution yield has attracted notice, and assets have surged to $8.5 billion since its launch less than three years ago.

Barron's recently spoke with Pier, who has been on Barron's 100 Most Influential Women in U.S. Finance list for the past two years, about her economic outlook, Fed policy, and where her "go anywhere" bond fund is heading this year. An edited version of the conversation follows.

Barron's*: Let's start with a topic weighing on many bond investors. Are you worried about the health of credit markets after the recent bankruptcies and bad bank loans?
Sonali Pier: Mostly, these events are about credit due diligence. There is no way around it. Having high underwriting standards and a well-resourced research team is important. At Pimco, we make sure we understand the company, its sources of cash, and how they use cash. Active credit selection is a key driver of our performance.

How does the economy look to you now?
Our view is for gross-domestic-product growth of about 1.6% this year and 1.8% next year. We think inflation will be around 3%—still above the Federal Reserve's target. We are concerned about weakening labor data and think there is potential for a short window of economic weakness due to disruption around tariffs and artificial intelligence. In fact, there are a lot of potential nodes of volatility, but there is potential for the economy to reaccelerate next year.

Photograph by MAGGIE SHANNON

"We have positioned the portfolio to benefit from higher rates on longer-term bonds and lower rates at the short end."

What will lead to that rebound in economic growth?
The impact of tax cuts will be positive. And there is potential for AI to increase growth, as well. However, there are companies that could benefit from AI and those that could be disintermediated. Part of our role as credit investors is deciphering between the two.

How do you expect the Federal Reserve to manage through this period?
Overall, there is potential for the Fed to cut [interest rates] a couple more times into year end. We need to make sure tariffs don't lead to any medium-term acceleration in inflation, so the Fed can address the weaker labor market. We expect that Fed rate cuts can add to the total-return potential of a strategy like ours. [Bond prices move inversely to rates.]

Are you worried about Fed independence from political interference?
Fed independence is a reason for the strength of U.S. capital markets. There aren't a lot of countries where you can issue a low-rated triple-C bond and investors are willing to buy it, knowing capital markets will remain open and robust. If investors can't discern what is quality, or are in a country where the rule of law is unclear and they aren't sure there will be due process to get their capital back, they aren't willing to give up that capital. We think it is very important for the Fed to maintain independence.

What is the Pimco Multisector Bond Active ETF's strategy?
We launched PYLD in June 2023 because there was client interest in a multisector bond fund in a tax-efficient ETF wrapper. Pimco has a 22-year track record in multisector income investing, but this is a distinct offering. It isn't a clone of anything we have on the shelf.

It is benchmark agnostic and has broad latitude within credit. We can choose corporate bonds, securitized assets, emerging market debt, and bank loans. The benefit to clients is marrying our top-down macroeconomic view with the bottom-up credit selection. We have an 85-plus person research team and sophisticated portfolio analytics to support the selection.

Returns have been good. What are the main drivers?
I would highlight asset allocation, industry selection, regional selection, and security selection, and the macroeconomic views that help us manage interest-rate sensitivity. Also, we have breadth and depth on the trading floor and a platform built to communicate across the globe, so we can bring in opportunistic areas to make sure we are building a really robust portfolio.

The fund has grown to more than $8 billion in assets in less than three years. Why has it been so popular?
With rates at these levels—corporate bonds and agency mortgages yield around 5%, and emerging market bonds and high-yield bonds yield near 7%—and our flexibility, we can produce a fair amount of income. Plus, with equities at relatively unprecedented valuation levels, fixed income looks attractive.

The fund stays mostly in investment-grade securities and has a defensive orientation. Is fear a reason the strategy is proving popular?
I don't want to say fear. The fact that it is benchmark agnostic and has a go-anywhere strategy is appealing. While we have a strategic long-term orientation, we are able to move quickly and change our asset allocation. For funds more tied to a benchmark, it's a little more difficult to take advantage of dislocations that can arise. In this type of strategy, we can, and we have.

The fund is diversified across asset classes. Diversification can subdue volatility, but we can still keep up with returns. For example, we can benefit from interest-rate sensitivity with investment-grade debt and agency mortgages, but add some equitylike sensitivity with high-yield bonds.

What are some examples of portfolio shifts?
At inception, PYLD was more corporate-bond heavy, and today it's a little more securitized-heavy. Securitized assets can be residential mortgages, collateralized loan obligations, or asset-backed securities. They are often floating rate and add resilience to a portfolio.

Agency mortgages are an example of where we see good relative value. We are getting similar yields to investment-grade corporates, and we have the implicit government guarantee behind them, and strong liquidity.

Can your fund hold private-credit issues?
We can own public and private securities. If we go with private options, we look to make sure we're being compensated for the illiquid nature, and we pay close attention to credit structure. We want to make sure that we are being adequately compensated for the fact that generally we can't change our minds after issuance and we will probably be holding that debt to maturity. You won't find a significant percentage of our portfolio in private holdings, given that PYLD offers daily liquidity. Currently, illiquid securities make up less than 1% of assets.

Your fund can diversify globally. What is an example of that?
One way we aim to benefit from lower interest rates is by gaining exposure to the United Kingdom and Australia. Here in the U.S., we have 30-year fixed mortgages, which means the impact of monetary policy will lag because people with low mortgage rates tend not to move as much. Currently, more than 60% of homeowners in the U.S. have mortgages with rates below 4%. But in Australia and the U.K., mortgages are shorter term and floating rate, so monetary-policy transmission is more direct. We expect rate cuts there will be needed.

Where is the portfolio positioned in terms of interest-rate sensitivity, or duration? Which maturities are most attractive?
We find the belly of the yield curve—the five- to 10-year space—the most attractive right now. We have positioned the portfolio to benefit from higher rates on longer-term bonds and lower rates at the short end. Our portfolio's overall duration is under five years, however.

Do you worry that federal deficits will lead to higher long-term rates?
Issues with the deficit will need to be addressed over time, and at this stage there isn't a willingness to address them. That will cause some pressure. That's why we are positioned for a steepening yield curve, and we have seen that already this year.

What about inflation protection?
We have some exposure to Treasury inflation-protected securities. That's the fourth leg of implementing our view on the direction of interest rates.

Let's turn to you. Tell me about your background.
I grew up in New Jersey and went to Princeton University. I knew well before college that I wanted to go into business. I had an internship after my sophomore year where I learned how dynamic the finance industry is, and I knew it would be an exciting career.

After college, I went to the credit-trading desk at J.P. Morgan, and after about nine years I moved to Pimco. I started on the leveraged-finance desk in 2013.

Did you relocate to California then?
Yes, it was a big move for us. I moved across the country with a new baby in tow and joined the buy side, all at the same time. I joined the multisector credit team in 2017. The first assets I managed were a sleeve in our global credit-market-neutral hedge fund.

How do you spend your free time?
Well, as a mom of two boys and with my Pimco role, there isn't that much free time. I am in a book group. But we work hard at Pimco. I like to joke that we work New York hours and California hours, too.

Thank you, Sonali. B

The Dow Tops 47 K. The Stock Market's Next Test.

BY PAUL R. LA MONICA

Bad news gets the headlines, but the stock market just keeps going up.

Let's face it—there was bad news aplenty this past week. The U.S. government shutdown extended to 24 days, the second longest on record. Oil prices spiked after the U.S. tightened sanctions on Russia. And trade spats continue to get attention, with President Donald Trump cutting off talks with Canada following Ontario's advertisement featuring Ronald Reagan. Even some high-profile reports left investors wanting: Netflix shares tumbled 10% on Oct. 22 after profits missed forecasts.

No matter. The Dow Jones Industrial Average advanced 2.2% this past week, topping 47,000; the S&P 500 index rose 1.9%; and the Nasdaq Composite gained 2.3%. All closed at record highs.

The market got a boost from the one data point available—the delayed consumer price index report for September. That helped lift the mood, since inflation was lower than expected and should cement another Federal Reserve interest-rate cut on Oct. 29. Gold, normally considered a haven, fell, perhaps a sign that the flight to safety was fading.

But really, it all comes down to earnings. Prominent U.S. companies, including Coca-Cola, GE Aerospace, General Motors, and other bellwethers, reported healthy results, putting earnings on pace to increase by 8.9% for the third quarter based on current releases and expectations, according to Evercore ISI data. Profits could grow by nearly 13% if beats remain strong, according to Evercore strategist Julian Emanuel.

That puts the pressure on top companies to keep reporting earnings that beat Wall Street's forecasts; failure to do so could be met with severe consequences. According to data from FactSet, S&P 500 companies that reported earnings below forecasts through Oct. 24 fell 3.5% in the two days before their earnings release through the two days after it, compared with an average 2.6% drop for a stock with an earnings miss during the past five years. And even companies that had superb earnings—we're looking at you, Vertiv Holdings and GE Vernova—ended lower. (FactSet looks at that four-day period to get a slightly longer view of how companies trade around earnings.)

Chalk the declines up to how rich the stock market is. The S&P 500 is trading at 22.2 times earnings estimates for 2026, well above its five-year average of 19.5, which means that nearly all companies will have to top forecasts to justify this premium. "Valuations are absolutely challenging," Dec Mullarkey, managing director of investment strategy and asset allocation at SLC Management, tells Barron's. "There is a big penalty if you miss."

With that in mind, investors should keep a close eye on the coming deluge of earnings. Five of the Magnificent Seven—Alphabet, Amazon.com, Apple, Microsoft, and Meta Platforms—are on tap to report during the week of Oct. 27. So are Dow components Visa, UnitedHealth Group, Verizon Communications, Caterpillar, Boeing, and Chevron. If too many of them stumble, the market could take a hit.

Small-cap stocks aren't out of the woods yet, either. The S&P Small Cap 600 gained 3% this past week, and profits for the index, which slid in 2023 and 2024, are expected to increase 10% this year and surge another 20% in 2026. Together, that has investors feeling pretty good about buying smaller stocks. "If you are a small-cap investor, you're coming off a tough period," says Bill Hench, head of the small-cap team at First Eagle Investments. "But now, there's a little glimmer of hope."

Just remember, hope isn't a strategy—and can quickly turn to despair if results fail to live up to the hype.

The Hunt for Quality Stocks

It's a stock market trend that only a sanitation worker could love.

Of late, investors scrounging for stocks have preferred junk—smaller companies with poor fundamentals and exorbitant valuations—over quality companies.

Goldman Sachs pointed out in a recent report that a basket of heavily shorted stocks, often considered the trashiest of the trash, had surged 24% in just the past month. What's more, the small-cap Russell 2000 index was up 11.8% over the past three months, more than triple the 3.2% rise in the Invesco S&P 500 Quality exchange-traded fund, home to profitable large-caps such as Apple, Mastercard, GE Aerospace, and Procter & Gamble. That is despite the fact that about 40% of the companies in the Russell 2000 are losing money.

Don't expect this trend to last. "The [small-cap] benchmarks are drowning in garbage," said analysts at Kailash Capital Research in a recent report. "Durability beats drama [over time.]"

Sticking with high-quality stocks isn't always easy, especially when speculative markets make winners out of shiny new objects. But investors need only to think back to the popping of the dot-com bubble in 2000, when the Nasdaq Composite fell nearly 40%, a period that this one is beginning to resemble.

"There are pockets of speculation," says Matt Morse, chief equity strategist at Grimes & Co. "Retail investors are making up a bigger share of daily trading volume, too. It isn't unlike what we saw in the late 1990s."

Even the artificial-intelligence trade, which has been producing profits, may be more junky than it seems. Citigroup cautioned in a report this month that it's starting to see some red flags there—what they dubbed "potential micro bubbles building under the surface." With that in mind, Citi has an equal-weighted portfolio of what it calls "AI at a reasonable price." The list includes more-attractively valued AI adopters like Booking Holdings, Instacart owner Maplebear, Match Group, and Pinterest, which all have price/earnings ratios below the S&P 500's 22.2.

Others, however, argue that it's worth pivoting away from tech and toward even cheaper stocks, especially if stocks are setting up for a fall. "There is some market vulnerability," Andrew Krei, co-chief investment officer at Crescent Grove Advisors, tells Barron's. "So, what do you do? Incrementally rotate away from more expensive parts of the market and look at value."

Along those lines, the Kailash analysts highlighted better-quality smaller stocks that are generating above-average returns on equity, including human-resources services firm TriNet Group, movie theater operator Cinemark Holdings, and cash and valuables security firm Brink's. All three trade for under 14 times earnings.

Trash may be having a moment, but quality will have your portfolio smelling like roses.

Microsoft Awaits Redemption

Microsoft has been all but ignored since its last earnings report. But a "cloudy" outlook when it releases its results this coming week could be just what the stock needs to start heading higher again.

Microsoft briefly topped the $4 trillion market-cap milestone in intraday trading after it reported its latest earnings in late July, but the stock has lost momentum since then. Shares, at about $524, are roughly flat since the company's fiscal fourth-quarter earnings release on July 30, even as the Nasdaq Composite has gained nearly 10%. Adding insult to apathy, Apple has soared more than 25%.

Microsoft's fiscal first-quarter 2026 results are due out on Oct. 29, and Wall Street is forecasting a nearly 11% increase in earnings, respectable growth for a company of its massive size. And that should be powered primarily by strength in Microsoft's Azure cloud-computing unit. Analysts expect revenue in that division to surge more than 30% from a year ago, according to FactSet.

"The tone from enterprise customers and partners has improved again, with large Azure partners citing accelerating growth trends," writes UBS analyst Karl Keirstead, whose $650 target for Microsoft is 25% above its current price. He expects Microsoft's partnership with OpenAI, the developer of ChatGPT, to improve the outlook for Azure even further in coming years.

Some have expressed concerns about how much money Microsoft is spending on the technology, since a lack of spending discipline could eventually hamper profit margins. CFRA Research analyst Angelo Zino, who has a Strong Buy rating on Microsoft and $620 price target, isn't nervous about that, though. In a recent report, he argues that Microsoft's capital-expenditure growth should moderate a bit next year and that future spending plans should see a "greater shift toward servers/hardware, which should also support more profitable AI growth."

What about the recent softness in Microsoft's stock since the last earnings report? It's important to note that it might simply be due for a breather—it's up nearly 25% so far in 2025. Despite that, it still trades at a reasonable, if not necessarily cheap, valuation of about 28.5 times earnings forecasts for its next fiscal year, in line with its five-year average. Jake Seltz, manager of the Allspring LT Large Growth ETF—where Microsoft is its No. 2 holding—tells Barron's that he thinks the stock's recent underperformance is "unwarranted, given its dominance with Azure and the cloud."

Microsoft could start moving again with another strong earnings report. Jordan Klein, an analyst at Mizuho Securities, calls Microsoft an example of a quality tech stock with "real AI upside and growth" and a "super compelling" long-term buy.

If all goes well, Microsoft may soon find itself back on the AI momentum train. B

Argentina's Bonds Look Like a Buying Opportunity

BY CRAIG MELLOW

All the money in the U.S. Treasury might not be enough to save Javier Milei's Argentina shock therapy program after this Sunday.

The country holds midterm elections Oct. 26, with its chain saw–wielding president needing at least one-third of the Lower House seats to keep his Peronist opponents from a veto-proof supermajority. Only half the chamber is up for re-election.

If Milei beats his one-third threshold, Argentine sovereign bonds, trading at similar spreads to Ukraine's, could look like a buy again. Investors aren't rushing to make that bet, though.

"I do view Sunday as a pretty binary situation," says Alejo Czerwonko, chief investment officer for emerging markets Americas at UBS Global Wealth Management. "If there's a sizable defeat for Milei, the downward spiral would resume."

The latest spiral started Sept. 7, when the Peronists drubbed Milei's Freedom Advances party in local elections in Buenos Aires province. Bonds due in 2038 lost a quarter of their value over the next two weeks, plunging to 43 cents on the dollar.

U.S. Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent sprang to the rescue, promising a $20 billion swap line for Argentina's beleaguered central bank. That pushed both bonds and the peso back up to pre–Buenos Aires election levels, for a while. They have been sliding again over the past week.

Bessent implicitly admitted that the first $20 billion would be insufficient, dangling another $20 billion Band-Aid backed by private banks and investors on Oct. 15. President Donald Trump said further assistance will be "somewhat subject to who wins the election."

"Markets understand that even $20 billion will run out," says Monica de Bolle, a senior fellow at the Peterson Institute for International Economics. "There's no logic to the private sector putting up another $20 billion."

Milei looks to be in for a close shave in the midterms. Current polling, notoriously imprecise in Argentina, shows the Peronists winning 64% of Parliament's Lower House, a whisker away from the two-thirds supermajority, says Matt Gertken, geopolitical strategist at BCA Research.

"It requires a high risk tolerance to be one of the early movers in that situation," he adds.

If Milei does squeak by, he will still face the problem he has been avoiding most of this year: With inflation still above 30% annually, the peso should be devaluing much faster than the bands the government has set for it.

A plunging currency could reignite the runaway inflation that Milei has managed to quell. He has no alternative, though, however much support Washington pours in, says Mark Sobel, a longtime Treasury official who's now a senior adviser at the Center for Strategic and International Studies. "Regardless of the political outcome, the peso will fall, and very soon," he predicts.

On the other hand, with no superpower invader to repel, it seems logical that Argentina's debt should trade tighter than Ukraine's, eventually. One generally predictive green shoot is sprouting beneath the political clamor: Buenos Aires apartment prices have been increasing (in dollar terms) since early last year, after six years of decline, by official statistics.

The rambunctious Milei is maturing politically, UBS' Czerwonko observes, "making efforts to appear more empathetic." His economic team is "very creative and resourceful."

The Peronists, for their part, offer little except a return to the calamitous past. "On a five- or 10-year time frame, Argentina is an improving emerging market," BCA's Gertken asserts.

For shorter-term trades, watch the election results. B

THE STRIKING PRICE

Third-quarter earnings reports from major banks indicated that consumers are financially healthy and experiencing little or no duress.

Consumer Stocks Are Due for a Catch-Up Rally

BY STEVEN M. SEARS

Bull markets can make it appear that everything is thriving. But that superficial view obscures the fact that not all stock and sectors are participating in the rally.

For investors, this disconnect could offer opportunities.

Consider: The consumer discretionary sector is underperforming the S&P 500. The Consumer Discretionary Select SPDR exchange-traded fund (ticker: XLY), which comprises some of the nation's top retailers, is up 5.9% this year, at $237.66, compared with 15.5% for the benchmark index.

This key measure of spending suggests that consumers are cautious and nervous. If they were as excited about the economy as investors, the sector ETF would be posting stronger returns.

This story line is at odds with third-quarter earnings reports from major banks, which show that consumers are financially healthy and experiencing little or no duress. Banks have powerful insights into consumer spending, and the view from Wall Street suggests investors are too negative on the sector.

Instead, investors are discounting the bank data and placing a higher value on recent debit- and credit-card spending reports that point to a consumer spending slowdown. After all, the job market is weak, and uncertainty about the impact of tariff diplomacy is widespread.

Aggressive investors who think the disconnect will soon remedy itself can preposition for a consumer discretionary sector rebound.

In anticipation, investors could consider building a position on the Consumer Discretionary Select SPDR. The ETF holds stocks such as Amazon.com, Tesla, Home Depot, McDonald's, Booking Holdings, TJX Cos., Starbucks, and Nike.

The simplest rebound trade is buying the ETF. Investors who are comfortable with options can buy January calls with strike prices that are either equal to, or slightly above, the ETF's price.

Call options increase in value when the underlying security rises. They also cost less than the underlying security, so less money is at risk should the investment thesis prove wrong.

There are many reasons to expect that the consumer discretionary sector is poised to stage a catch-up rally against the broad market.

Earnings season has begun anew, which will bring important updates from major retailers, while looming economic events may help consumers feel more confident about spending money.

If the Federal Reserve lowers interest rates again, as it is expected to do at least once before the year ends, companies might hire more employees, especially ahead of the critical winter holidays, which provide the bulk of retail sales.

If our optimism is misplaced, and concerns about the job market and the impact of tariffs on the price of goods continue to chill consumer spending, the trade will fail. If the ETF is below the strike price at expiration, investors will lose money.

During the past 52 weeks, the Consumer Discretionary Select SPDR has ranged from $173.10 to $243.40.

The January options expiration was chosen to include events that could cause investors to rerate the sector. It captures Black Friday and Cyber Monday retail sales reports, which are critical to determining the sector's trajectory. It also captures the Christmas season, which always has the power to move the sector.

Christmas is such an important bellwether for retail sales, and the entire economy, that investors have memorialized it with a trader's dictum: If Santa Claus should fail to call, bears may come to Broad and Wall—the home of the New York Stock Exchange. B

No, Rigetti Computing's CEO Didn't Sell His Stock

BY MACKENZIE TATANANNI

Shares of Rigetti Computing plunged nearly 15% a week ago after rumors circulated on social media that its CEO had sold his stake in the quantum computing company.

In fact, Subodh Kulkarni maintains an equity interest through stock options that give him the right to buy 2.7 million shares. Some 1.6 million are vested, meaning Kulkarni has full ownership, and 1.1 million are unvested. That is equivalent to a 0.8% stake in the company, which had 324.17 million shares outstanding on Thursday.

"My equity position reflects how deeply I'm invested, both personally and professionally, in Rigetti's success," Kulkarni tells Barron's. "The majority of my compensation is tied to long-term performance, and I have no plans to reduce my stake."

It is true that Kulkarni exercised an option to buy a million shares in late May. A May 21 Securities and Exchange Commission filing shows he exercised an option to buy the shares for 96 cents apiece the day prior, before selling them for around $12 each.

However, Rigetti's annual proxy statement filed April 25 shows the CEO has a chunk of compensation in stock options. That has been the case since he joined Rigetti in 2022.

He is also eligible to receive "stock options, restricted stock, restricted stock units or other equity awards," the proxy says. These options are subject to vesting schedules, which define when Kulkarni earns ownership and when he can exercise them.

The stock has seen explosive gains, rising 150% this year and 3,086% over the past 12 months. A $10,000 investment in Rigetti last year would be worth more than $318,000 today. B

Rumors on social media that the CEO of quantum-computer maker Rigetti was unloading his shares drove the stock down 15%. What really happened.

Darden Shares Took a Tariff Hit. Some Execs Have Been Selling.

Darden Restaurants, parent of Olive Garden and LongHorn Steakhouse, was once considered a winner in fast-casual dining. But the stock slumped after its fiscal first-quarter earnings on Sept. 18, and some insiders are selling.

Matt Broad, Darden's general counsel, and corporate secretary, sold 5,661 shares on Oct. 6 at an average price of $193.40 each, or some $1.1 million, according to an SEC filing.

The form shows Broad also made a bona fide gift of 515 shares to a donor-advised fund, a charitable vehicle that usually allows donors to take an immediate tax deduction.

Following the transactions, Broad directly owned 13,915.754 shares valued at $2.6 million based on Friday's $188 closing price. This includes shares acquired under Darden's employee stock purchase plan.

On Oct. 14, John Martin, group president responsible for chains such as Yard House and The Capital Grille, sold 1,700 shares for $184.58 each. Martin directly owned 18,386.325 shares after the sale, worth about $3.5 million as of Friday's close.

Darden didn't immediately respond to a request for comment.

Ahead of first-quarter earnings, shares were up 11.8% in 2025. The stock fell after Darden warned that rising food and labor costs—and efforts to hold down prices—would hurt earnings, and are now up 0.8%. B

Lithia Motors · LAD-NYSE

Buy · $311.87 on Oct. 22
by Seaport Research Partners

Lithia reported third-quarter 2025 adjusted earnings per share of $9.50, which compares to our/consensus forecasts of $8.27/$8.57....Overall, we consider this a solid earnings result with several factors worth commending: solid new-vehicle results despite significant headwinds in the United Kingdom, used unit growth of 6.3%, aftersales gross profit growth of 9.1%, stable finance and insurance, gross profit per unit, and Direct Financing Corp., which remained solidly profitable, and selling, general, and administrative spend, which remained under control. We think, however, that investors may be most encouraged by the significant share repurchase activity that underscores the strength, flexibility, and cash-generative characteristics of Lithia's business model. This print also gives us increased confidence in our Street-high 2026 earnings per share estimate of $40.53. Trading at just 7.5 times our 2026 EPS estimate, Lithia shares remain one of our top picks. Price target: $465.

Vertiv Holdings · VRT-NYSE

Outperform · $174.80 on Oct. 22
by Evercore ISI

Vertiv Holdings reported another strong quarter with revenue growing 29%—led by product revenue, which was up 33.9% year over year, though services also contributed (up 9.9% Y/Y). Notably, organic orders accelerated—increasing about 60% Y/Y (orders in the $3.5 billion ballpark if not higher) and backlog of $9.5 billion (up 28.4% Y/Y and 11.8% sequentially) with book-to-bill at about 1.4 times.... Despite concerns on the durability of the artificial-intelligence infrastructure buildout, we think Vertiv's strong backlog and orders momentum provide solid visibility for growth into calendar-year 2026. Notably, we think that Vertiv remains well positioned to capture share in an expanding market through its technological leadership. Price target/base case: $200.

EQT · EQT-NYSE

Hold · $55.71 on Oct. 22
by Siebert William Shank

EQT reported another strong quarterly beat across all key financial and operational metrics. However, the fourth-quarter 2025 guidance disappointed with lower production on higher capital expenditure....We believe that some near-term selling pressure could emerge on the disappointing fourth-quarter 2025 guidance; however, we believe that the direction of the stock will depend on its preliminary 2026 outlook commentary....We reaffirm our Hold rating on relative valuation. Further, we see an unbalanced risk/reward setup, given the elevated investor expectation, as EQT is the best performing stock in our coverage universe with a positive total return of 21.8% year to date. Price target: $59.

General Motors · GM-NYSE

by Benchmark Research

A clean print and another guidance raise underscore GM's execution, disciplined pricing, and strong cash generation; GM Financial remains resilient, and the balance sheet is solid. That said, the quarter may have been "too good" for near-term risk-reward; we see a bumpier setup into the fourth quarter and early 2026 as tariffs, gradual pricing normalization, electric-vehicle demand moderation after third-quarter pull-forward, and warranty/mix variability temper operating leverage. With the shares touching our $65 price target and printing an all-time high, we view the near-term upside as limited; we maintain our Buy rating but counsel patience for a better entry on volatility while we track tariff mitigation, EV ramp cadence, and capital returns.

Halliburton · HAL-NYSE

Buy · $23 on Oct. 21
by Melius Research

Halliburton remains a returns-focused, global oil-services leader and the only fully vertically integrated oilfield equipment and services company in North America. Its competitive position abroad and offshore continues to improve, giving it excellent exposure to future E&P spending trends, while its North American business provides a steady cash flow stream. The ownership interest in VoltaGrid signals a willingness to wade back into mergers and acquisitions and a push into the booming power market. The initial Middle East data center focus plays to the company's strengths of global industrial scale and deep, long-term relationships. We continue to rate the shares Buy. Price target: $43.

PennyMac Financial Services · PFSI-NYSE

Buy · $128.78 on Oct. 22
by BTIC Research & Strategy

We like PennyMac as the best blend between growth and value within our coverage right now, where the current stock valuation below 10 times earnings looks very reasonable relative to the company's achievable growth rate at current interest rates. There could be earnings upside versus our current estimate of $13.25 a share from building additional scale if rates are lower, although in the very near-term we're working under the assumption that mortgage rates will stay around 6%.

The stock's current valuation is barely above the level a year ago, even though we can identify a number of operational and financial enhancements, including tangible progress in reducing servicing costs, and an even larger pipeline of borrowers with pent-up demand to refinance if mortgage rates continue to fall.

Price target: $135.

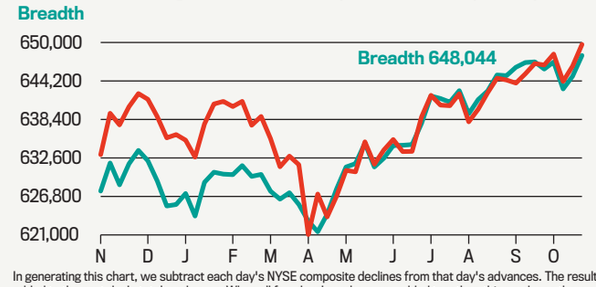
NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE COMPOSITE LIST

BARRONS.COM/DATA

NYSE Cumulative Daily Breadth vs DJIA

I'm on Fire: NYSE Composite breadth rose for a second week. The S&P 500 climbed 1.9% on strong earnings from the likes of Honeywell and Coca-Cola. Winning NYSE stocks outpaced losers by nearly 3 to 1.



In generating this chart, we subtract each day's NYSE composite declines from that day's advances. The resultant total is added to the next day's total, and so on. When all five days' numbers are added together, this produces the weekly figure we plot. Dec. 31, 1985 =1000.

About Our Funds
The listings include the top 1250 open-end funds by assets. These funds value their portfolios daily and report net asset values (the dollar amount of their holdings divided by the number of shares outstanding) to the National Association of Securities Dealers. Total returns reflect both price changes and dividends; these figures assume that all distributions are reinvested in the fund. Because Lipper is constantly updating its database, these returns may differ from those previously published or calculated by others. 3 year returns are cumulative. The NAV is the last reported closing price for the week. Footnotes: NA: not available. NE: performance excluded by Lipper editor. NN: fund not tracked. NS: fund not in existence for whole period. e: ex capital gains distributions. f: previous day's quote. n: no front- or back-end sales charge. p: fund assets are used to pay marketing and distribution costs (12b-1 fees). r: fund levies redemption fee or back-end load. s: stock dividend or split of 25% or more. t: fund charges 12b-1 fees (for marketing and distribution) and a back-end load. v: capital-gains distribution may be a return of capital. x: ex cash dividend.

U.S. Dollar Index vs Euro and Yen

Green Light: Delayed by the government shutdown, an inflation reading came in slightly cooler than the previous reading. That could open the way for a rate cut at the Fed's next meeting. The dollar's early-week rise leveled off, leaving the ICE U.S. Dollar Index higher by 0.5% by week's end.

How Democracy Is Being Undone—and What to Do About It

BY WILLIAM PRIEST

The writer is vice chair of TD Wealth and founder of Epoch Investment Partners. His newest book is Consequences: The Rise of a Fractured World Order, with David Roche and Alex Michailoff.

Democracy, once thought to be self-sustaining, is on defense. Like every system before it, democracy has gone through cycles of strength and weakness—but its survival is no longer guaranteed. What's at stake isn't simply a style of governance, but the wealth, freedom, and happiness of its citizens.

The brief period of U.S. dominance after the Cold War has ended, replaced by a multipolar era when democracy is challenged both from outside and within. Externally, democracy faces an increasingly coordinated "Axis of Autocracies": China, Russia, Iran, and North Korea. Each rejects the liberal international order and seeks to replace it with authoritarianism. They share a conviction that democracies are weak, divided, and destined to fail.

This struggle is taking place in a gray zone, where cyberattacks, propaganda, and economic coercion substitute for open war. Russia's assault on Ukraine is a stark example. Yes, the war is a blatant effort to redraw borders through military force. But it's also an attempt to destabilize European democracies through energy blackmail and attacks on infrastructure.

China, meanwhile, uses economic leverage to expand its influence across the Global South and to undermine democracy. Its Belt and Road Initiative, for instance, appeals to countries long resentful of Western colonialism. Iran, for its part, exports drones, militias, and ideology to extend its reach. North Korea relies on making nuclear threats for its survival.

The Ukraine war has only tightened the bonds among these regimes. They are linking military supply chains, supporting one another economically, and strengthening their political alignment. The parallel to the fascist Axis of the 1930s is hard to miss.

And yet, the greatest danger to democracy may be coming from within. Populism, fiscal recklessness, and a collapse of civic discourse are sapping resilience from the inside out. Populist leaders thrive on division, promising quick fixes while weakening institutions. They appoint loyalists over competent officials, undermine courts, and turn citizens against one another.

Social media supercharges the problem. It creates echo chambers where falsehoods spread faster than facts. The phrase "seeing is believing" is turned upside down. Now, "believing is seeing." The Jan. 6 attack on the U.S. Capitol was the most visible consequence of this inversion, but it will hardly be the last.

Social media and artificial intelligence are reshaping the information war. Generative AI now enables anyone to flood the internet with convincing fake news, deepfakes of politicians, and propaganda at scale. Authoritarian regimes rightfully see it as the perfect weapon against democracy: Reality can be manufactured, history rewritten. Even leaders of democracies are starting to use these tools to distort reality and sow political discontent.

AI also threatens jobs in sectors once thought safe—finance, law, customer service. This is already fueling the type of economic resentment that drives populism. Meanwhile, the end of globalization will bring about higher costs for consumers and reduced economic competitiveness. Fiscal profligacy and unsustainable debt-to-gross-domestic-product ratios undermine democracy by threatening confidence in currencies and capital markets.

Democracy isn't collapsing from single blows. It's being chipped away—internally and externally. To survive, it requires decisive action.

Democracies must stop trying to manage external crises at the margins and instead pursue victory where it matters. Half measures only prolong conflicts and embolden autocracies. Ukraine must be given the support required to decisively defeat Russia, not merely survive. Strengthening the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and U.S. alliances is essential, both for deterrence and for spreading the cost of protecting democracy. Retreat into isolationism—whether under the banner of "America First" or any other slogan—will be ruinous.

Internally, democracies must restore their legitimacy by delivering growth and fairness. Citizens need to have a stake in the system. That means policies that encourage wealth creation while ensuring broad distribution: meritocracy, progressive taxation, and strong social safety nets.

Civic strength is equally vital. Institutions must be protected from populist capture: courts, regulators, and agencies must remain independent. Civic education, critical thinking, and credible journalism are essential antidotes to disinformation. Immigration, though politically fraught, is an economic lifeline for aging economies. It should be managed pragmatically rather than ideologically.

Finally, democracies must regulate AI to safeguard freedom and human dignity. If left to authoritarian regimes, AI will become an engine of control.

The most dangerous scenario is the convergence of internal populism with external autocratic pressures. Yet democracies retain immense advantages: wealth, innovation, alliances, and the ability to self-correct. The future is open—if citizens are vigilant, united, and reject the autocratic fuel of fear.

Benjamin Franklin, when asked what kind of government had been delivered to the new republic after the 1787 Constitutional Convention, offered a timeless warning: "A republic, if you can keep it." B

Why Seniors Should Be Taking the Stairs

BY NEAL TEMPLIN

Kerry Stewart has a long-running dispute with his wife when it comes to their two-story house outside Baltimore.

"I keep telling my wife I'm staying in my two-story house, and she keeps saying we should move to a one-story house," Stewart says.

Stewart, a 78-year-old exercise physiologist and professor of medicine at Johns Hopkins University, believes that going up and down stairs helps keep seniors in shape, himself included.

He isn't alone. Some research has found that seniors who climb more stairs have lower mortality rates and better retain their ability to do basic chores.

The various studies are mainly observational and could be skewed by confounding factors—people who are healthy for other reasons could use stairs more, for example. But they underscore that fitness isn't only achieved at the gym or through formal workouts.

"You may go up the stairs in 10 or 15 seconds, but over the course of the day, that benefit accumulates," says Stewart. "People who maintain an active life, even at low levels, can accumulate a lot of benefit over time."

Scientists once thought we had to exercise for 20 minutes or more at a time for cardiovascular fitness. That thinking has evolved. Little bits of exercise throughout the day may be just as beneficial. In some instances, it may be more beneficial in reducing cardiovascular risk factors.

This is borne out by research on walking. This study found that until age 60, mortality rates decline when one takes up to an average of between 8,000 and 10,000 steps a day. After age 60, mortality rates decline with up to 6,000 to 8,000 steps a day. It didn't matter if the steps were spread out over multiple sessions or clumped together in long walks, researchers told Barron's.

Climbing stairs is a more intense exercise than walking, and that appears to confer its own benefits. Stairs don't just improve your cardiovascular health; they build leg muscles and improve balance.

Over the past century, everything from cars to the automation of daily household chores to online shopping has removed physical activity from our lives, says Bethany Barone Gibbs, who chairs the Department of Epidemiology and Biostatistics at the West Virginia University School of Public Health. "Getting a first-floor master bedroom is another way we have engineered physical activity out of our lives."

She goes on. "A lot of European cities were built and designed before cars, and they're much more walkable. And there's also more infrastructure for biking and for more active transportation in general."

Gibbs, who is a volunteer expert at the American Heart Association, says Americans should re-engineer their lives to add more exercise by walking or taking stairs whenever possible. "Stairs are an awesome way to work activity back into our lives," she says.

What about the risk of falling on stairs? It's a concern—particularly for seniors. But the risks may be relative.

Stairs equipped with rails, for example, pose less risk of falls to seniors than walking around the neighborhood, says Meera Sheffrin, a Stanford Medicine geriatrician. She says seniors sometimes fall because they don't pick their feet up enough while walking, and they stumble over a rough spot. She says going up stairs builds the same leg muscles that help us walk correctly.

She loves the idea of stairs for seniors who can handle them. And she thinks it's a good idea for seniors to have options without stairs as their health declines.

"It's fine to buy a home with stairs if you're in good health," she says. "But I also recommend buying a home with a first-story bedroom and bathroom." B

The Low-Hanging Fruit of Nuclear Power

To the Editor:
I've watched Constellation for quite a while ("Constellation Energy Has the Power That AI Needs. The CEO Is Making the Most of It," Cover Story, Oct. 17). Buying Calpine is huge. Constellation also owns all of the nuclear power plants in Illinois, as well as those of Philadelphia Electric Power and Baltimore Gas and Electric. As the U.S. electric supply tightens with increased demand, Constellation should be paid even more for its power generation.

It's about time someone restarted Three Mile Island unit 1. If Holtec doesn't restart the Palisades nuclear power plant in Michigan, Constellation should. If no one restarts the Duane Arnold nuclear power plant in Iowa, Constellation should. Those three units are the low-hanging fruit of nuclear power.

What to Worry About

To the Editor:
You should be worried about the continued wealth disparity ("Worried About a Crash? Here's What You Should Be Worried About Instead," Up & Down Wall Street, Oct. 17). When the wealth gap gets large enough, social unrest increases. What may be mistaken for "political conflict" is really economic conflict.

I trace this back to the unfair way that the 2008-09 financial crisis was handled. Speculators and banks were rewarded, and savers were punished. The beatings continued for years, with zero interest-rate policy and quantitative easing, until now, when 10% of the population accounts for the bulk of retail spending. Asset holders are rewarded by low rates and asset appreciation, and those without assets simply face inflation.

Bats in the Belfry

To the Editor:
When there's a lot of froth in markets, as there most certainly is now, anything less than ebullient remarks from one of the adults in the room is cause for concern ("Banks' Strong Earnings Leave Investors Digging Deeper for Trouble Spots," Oct. 17). Not just cockroaches below, but bats in the D.C. belfry above. Unhedged here looks like unhinged. It's been a long time coming. Those are usually the big ones.

Nest Eggs?

To the Editor:
Robert Moskow's glowing mention of Vital Farms in "This Food Stocks Pro Sizes Up Industry Winners and Sinners. Why PepsiCo Shouldn't Split" (Interview, Oct. 16) brought to mind fellow egg producer Cal-Maine Foods, which recently talked about its desire to invest in cage-free and pasture-raised production following its most recent earnings report. Both companies' stocks should be worth buying and holding due to their strong fundamentals and consumers' increasing desire to pay for premium egg products.

What's Driving the Shift to Private Markets?

A clear generational trend is underway, led by younger advisors.

Private market investments — including debt, equity, real estate and real assets — are becoming a potentially valuable portfolio diversification tool for financial advisors. A recent survey by WSJ Intelligence and Erdos Media Research of more than 300 advisors reveals the full extent of this movement toward private markets.

Behind it is a generational shift, on both the investor side and the advisor side. More than half of all advisors believe their younger clients are looking for more than a traditional portfolio. And younger financial advisors — those under 45 years of age — are more likely than their older peers to regularly construct portfolios that include both public and private investments. They also expect their client base to become increasingly invested in private markets.

Source: The Next Generation of Financial Advisors, WSJ Intelligence and Erdos Media Research, Q3 2025.
Methodology: WSJ Intelligence, in collaboration with Erdos Media Research, conducted an online survey among 303 U.S. financial advisors. The study sought to understand how advisors approach their client investments and acquisition/retention through the perspectives of two distinct segments: established clients (typically males 45 years of age or older with an investment strategy of mostly traditional investments) and emerging clients (reflecting younger males under 45 years of age, ethnically diverse males, females in general and those who are gender diverse with a more diverse investment portfolio). All surveys were conducted between July 18, 2025, and August 14, 2025.
